MINERS RIOTING.

Fresh Troubles In the Pocahontas Coal Field.

STATE TROOPS ARE ORDERED OUT.

Houses Burned and Other Depredations Committed—Armed Men Force Fifty Foreigners to Quit Work and Leave the Field — No Passengers Permitted to Leave a Train at Eckman.

WHEELING, July 6.—A special received early this morning was to the effect that the miners throughout the Elkhorn region are rioting, having burned houses and committed other depredations.

Ordered to the Front.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., July 6.—Midnight—Companies I and G of the state militia here have received orders from Governor McCorkle at Charleston to report at the Pocahontas mining district at once. A special train is now in waiting to carry them to the scene of the trouble.

The situation in the Elkhorn coal region is very serious. Captain-Adjutant Lyons of the Second regiment has ordered all companies to assemble and be ready to move to Elkhorn at a moment's notice.

Held In Readiness.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., July 6.—Governor McCorkle has ordered the Second regiment under arms in readiness to proceed to the Pocahontas coal fields.

The miners with Winchesters forced 50 of the foreign laborers to quit work and leave the field.

Wednesday night a band of armed strikers met the Norfolk and Western train at Eckman and refused to allow any one to leave the coaches.

United States Marshal Garden was notified and he has ordered all the deputy marshals in the state to mass at Huntington today in order to protect the trains.

ELECTRIC MAILCARS

Will Be In Use in Philadelphia In About Two Months.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—The Philadelphia Traction company is having a number of mailcars built in accordance with arrangements made with the postal authorities. They will be different in design from the mailcars constructed for the People's Traction company, but will conform very closely to the style adopted by the Brooklyn trolley companies. The same style of cars will likely be put on the electric roads in Cincinnati, the idea being that mail can be assorted when en route between the various city substations. The new mailcars will be quite long, one-half being set apart for the mail matter and the other half for passengers. They will be run over a special route, and will be in service in about two months.

POOR FRANK LENZ.

Now Said He Was Killed by Turkish Cavalry Officers.

PITTSBURG, July 6.—Another letter confirming the death in Armenia of Frand Lenz, the Pittsburg wheelman, who was making a tour around the world, has been received here by T. P. Langhans from a missionary in Asia Minor. The name of the missionary is not given because his life would be endangered if the Turkish government should learn that he was writing on the case. The missionary, however is working with Sachtleben, the St. Louis man who was sent out in search of Lenz. The letter states that they have discovered that Lenz was murdered by Turkish cavalry officers high in the service of the sultan, and for that reason the work is attended with great danger.

The bell of Lenz's bicycle was found at Teharouk. His mirror, mailbox and another box which he is known to have carried, were found in the river between Shamia and Muzersta, while the tires of his wheel were discovered at Tchelkni, where a Kurd was using them for a saddlegirth.

The letter states further that Sachtleben could find the remains of Lenz if it were safe to undertake the work, owing to the high standing of his murderers the task is too dangerous, and all further investigations will have to be abandoned unless the government of the United States interferes and gives protection.

Midsummer Reports From the Commercial Centers.

CROP PROSPECTS ARE BETTER

Than Previous Reports Have Made Them. Active Demand For Goods—Working Force Increased Half a Million Hands Get an Advance In Wages—Prices Going Up—Fall Trade Outlook Bright.

NEW YORK, July 6.—R. G. Dun & Company's weekly review of trade says: The midsummer reports from all commercial centers are of especial interest, covering the questions on which the future of business depends. They indicate distinctly better crop prospects than other official or commercial accounts, a marked increase in retail distribution of products, an active demand for goods and a general enlargement of the working force, with some advance in the wages of more than 500,000 hands. At the same time they show that the rapid advance in prices has somewhat checked the buying of few classes of products. In some parts of the country the outlook for fall trade is considered bright.

Comparison of prices for various iron products shows an advance ranging from 72.2 per cent since February for wire nails to 7.1 per cent for anthracite pig, and in all kinds averaging 22 per cent. The demand and rise have come so suddenly that even while the first order for shipments of steel billets to Europe given some time ago, when prices were low, is being announced, the price here has advanced from $17 in April to $22.25, or about 31 per cent.

Wool is strong, both here and abroad, the London sales opening July 2 at higher prices, and the average for 104 qualities of domestic wool quoted by Coates Brothers has risen nearly half a cent since June 15. Sales have been enormous, though largely speculative, but exceeding those of May and June in any previous year. There is a growing reorder demand for heavyweight woolens, and many new kinds of lightweights have been opened with notable irregularities in prices, some lower and others higher than last year.

But the manufacturers are better sustained thus far than expected, and the feeling is very hopeful, especially as labor troubles have substantially ended. Prices of cotton goods also continue to advance and the mills are generally well employed. Speculation has advanced cotton, though the crop news is favorable, but has depressed wheat 2 cents in spite of estimates that the yield has been materially reduced since June 1.

Every year the crop reports are having less influence, and the time is ripe for a radical change in government estimates, which the department proposes. The year closes with more than 2,600,000 bales of American cotton available here and abroad, and with at least 65,000,000 bushels surplus wheat, although some make the quantity 35,000,000 bushels larger. The crop of oats is certain to be large, and the prospects for corn has greatly improved within the last few weeks.

Failures.

There were 6,657 commercial failures in the first half of 1895, against 7,039 in the first half of 1894 and 6,401 in the first half of 1893. These commercial failures involved liabilities of $88,839,944 this year against $101,739,306 last year and $168,864,444 in 1893. Manufacturing failures for the half year were 1,204 against 1,501 last year, and liabilities $40,301,949 against $41,376,102 last year and about $89,000,000 in the first half of 1893.

Trading failures for the half year were 5,335 against 5,402 last year, and liabilities $45,669,830 against $52,345,978 last year and about $61,000,000 in 1893. Manufacturing failures were in number .86 of 1 per cent of all manufacturing concerns, against .42 last year, with liabilities averaging $113 for every such concern against $117 last year.

Trading failures were .64 of 1 per cent of all firms in business, against .64 last year, with liabilities averaging only $54 for every such concern in business, against $62 last year.

Banking failures, not included in above statements, were 63, with liabilities of $16,553,276 against 63 last year with liabilities of $13,184,461.

The details show a decrease in every class of failures in the second, compared with the first quarter of 1895, both in number and magnitude, and defaulting liabilities averaging $34 against $40 for every firm in business, and $3.04 against $4.03 for every $1,000 solvent payments.

EDUCATORS GATHER.

All Grades, From Kindergarten to University, Represented at Denver.

DENVER, July 6.—The greatest gathering of educators ever held in the United States, including instructors of every grade, from the kindergarten to the university, was inaugurated yesterday at the capitol, which was given up for the time being to the national council of education, which is one of the 12 departments of the National Educational association. The general meetings of the latter organization will not be held until next week, by which time it is estimated by the committee on arrangements, from the responses already in hand, that there will be over 25,000 visitors in Denver. Nine committees, representing the business and commercial interests of the city, have been at work for the past two months on the arrangements for the convenience and entertainment of the delegates. Yesterday's sessions were of a purely routine character.

The proceedings were opened by President C. C. Rounds of the national council, who briefly reviewed the work of the past year. B. A. Hinsdale of Ann Arbor then presented the report of the committee on pedagogics, and at the afternoon meeting the report of the committee on psychological inquiry was discussed. The National Educational association is the largest educational body in the world. The most famous accomplishments of the organization have been in the line of systematizing the courses of study in the colleges, high schools and intermediate schools throughout the United States and Canada. The reports of its committees and departments are the most valuable educational documents published in this country, and have attained a wide circulation in Europe.

TO THE SUPREME COURT

The Suit Against the Stanford Estate Will No Doubt Be Carried.

CINCINNATI, July 6.—Attorney General Harmon spent the Fourth here and will not be back to Washington until Monday. He could not state yesterday what would be the next movement in the suit of the government to recover $15,000,000 from the Leland Stanford estate. He will not consider the matter until he has the opinion of the district court in California, and a letter from Attorney L. D. McKissick, who has charge of the case, giving the opinion of the latter as well as the status of the case. Judge Harmon has no knowledge of the case except from newspaper reports, as it was begun and submitted before he had charge of the department of justice. He assumes that when the government begins a suit of such magnitude that it will be carried to the court of last resort, but he will have nothing to say on that matter until he examines the decision of the district court and hears officially from Mr. McKissick.

WILL BE IRRIGATED.

Forty Thousand Acres of Now Worthless Land In California.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6.—Two big eastern financial houses with many millions of capital to invest have decided upon a step that means a good deal for California. Color & Company, bankers of New York, and the North American Trust and Loan company of Chicago, will take the bonds of the Poso and Turlock irrigation districts—until now almost worthless and will supply funds in such quantities that the work on both systems can be pushed to completion.

L. H. Hote, president of the Chicago company, who carried on the negotiation for both of the concerns, has been here for some time, and having concluded his arrangements has just started for Chicago. He has arranged to take enough of the bonds of the Poso district to complete it. It is said that all of the canal ditches and dams will be finished within 90 days.

Mr. Hote has also agreed to take nearly all of the remaining bonds of the Turlock district. The contract which Poe, Nutt & Company has to finish the Turlock system has been assigned to James F. Waymire.

Work on the Turlock system will begin on July 15, and it is estimated that it will be finished by next April. This means the great areas of rich soil, whose only need is water to make them as fertile as any in the world, will now be turned into good fields and orchards.

The Poso irrigation district was organized under the Wright law in September, 1888. It embraces 40,000 acres and is bonded for $500,000.

The excitement is at a high pitch, and the mob only needs a leader to take Belcher and Spencer out and hang them

Seljan, was found in the river, and the prisoners first arrested—Mato Mikau and wife, Anton Beckovitz, John Urban and John Drubnitz—were formally charged with murder. The prisoners still refuse to talk, but the police expect a confession soon.

A HOTEL GHOST.

The Narrative of a Singular Experience of Lord and Lady Dunraven.

Apropos of a report that the Brevoort House was to be closed, which was denied, however, there is a story that Lady Dunraven has been known to tell about the famous old inn. The countess is described by those who know her as a woman much more inclined to common sense than to ghost haunted Cock lanes, even with Dr. Johnson's authority. She used to tell the facts in the tale simply for what they were worth.

It was more than one decade ago, years before the Valkyrie was thought of, when Lord Dunraven was first interested in the mining regions of northern Michigan. He and Lady Dunraven were staying in New York for a few days before starting west and had taken rooms at the Brevoort—pleasant rooms, with a view of the avenue and a nice glimpse of Washington square. The first night, being tired with their voyage, they went early to bed, but, as it happened, not so early to sleep. Both the earl and countess were blessed with hearty English constitutions. They were not at all accustomed to lying awake till the small hours.

They wondered what they could have done, what they could have eaten or drank to afflict them with such gratuitous vigilance. Just at a venture finally they bundled themselves out into the adjoining parlor, made themselves extempore couches there and slept soundly till morning. Next night and the night after there was the same wakefulness and in the end the same migration to the adjoining room for relief. They began to think they should have to leave town earlier than they had planned, for they would not for the world have made any pretext to shift chambers.

The explanation of the mystery, if it was an explanation, came out by chance. They had a call before long from an old time New Yorker whom they had met in England, an authority on all matters pertaining to the town's minor history. "I wonder," he remarked casually, "that they should have given you these rooms. You know it was in that room there, not so long ago, that a Mr. X—— hanged himself." It was in that room that Lord and Lady Dunraven had tried in vain to sleep, and they exchanged significant glances. Of course it was only a coincidence, they said, but the next day they took their departure for the west.—New York Tribune.

INFLUENCE OF SCIENCE.

The Characteristic of Savants Is Their Unfailing Optimism.

The best that we gain from the pursuit of research is, Professor C. S. Minot writes in The Popular Science Monthly, our characteristic optimism. We are engaged in achieving results, and results of the most permanent and enduring quality. A business man may achieve a fortune, but time will dissipate it. A statesman may be the savior of a nation, but how long do nations live? Knowledge has no country, belongs to no class, but is the might of mankind, and it is mightier for what each of us has done. We have brought our stones, and they are built into the edifice and into its grandeur. My stone is a small one. It will certainly be forgotten that it is mine; nevertheless it will remain in place.

How different is the pessimism toward which literary men are seen to tend! Harvard university lost James Russell Lowell in 1891 and Asa Gray in 1888. The letters of both of these eminent men have been published. Lowell's letters grow sad and discouraged, and he gives way more and more to the pessimistic spirit. Gray is optimistic steadily and to the end. The difference was partly due to natural temperament, but chiefly, I think, to the influence of their respective professions. The subject material of the literary man is familiar human nature and familiar human surroundings, and his task is to express the thoughts and dreams which these suggest. He must compete with the whole past, with all the genius that has been. There is nothing new under the sun, he exclaims. But to us it is a proverb contradicted by our daily experience.

Galvanic Bronzing.

By means of a recent French improvement the process of galvanic bronzing is said to have been made not only more simple, but capable also of giving every tone, from that of barbedian bronze to antique green, governed by the length of time that the copper is allowed to remain in contact with the liquid. After the piece has been well scoured it is covered by means of a brush with a mixture composed of 20 parts of castor oil, 80 of alcohol and 40 parts each of soft soap and water. Thus treated, the piece left to itself for a period of 24 hours becomes bronzed, and if the duration of contact be prolonged the tone changes, a very great variety of tones, pleasing in their appearance, being obtainable in this manner. The drying is finally effected with hot sawdust, the only remaining operation being then that of coating the piece with a colorless varnish largely diluted with alcohol, thus insuring work of the finest character.—New York Sun.

A man may do very well with a very little knowledge, and scarce be found out, in mixed company; everybody is so much more ready to produce his own than to call for a display of your acquisitions.—Lamb.

PROMPTLY ANSWERED.

General Ryan's Conundrum Didn't Bother the Irishman For a Moment.

One of General Ryan's peculiarities is that he never tells the same story to the same man a second time. Not long ago he was talking about his travels in the United Kingdom. "I had always thought," said he, "that the famous Irish wit and repartee were only to be found on the stage or in Lever's novels, but I came away from Ireland with a very different idea.

"I was stopping at a little country inn, and a game of cards was in progress. I was invited to take a hand, and as an Americanized Irishman I thought I ought to keep up the reputation of the country for sociability. I asked what they were playing, and they replied 'Forty-five,' an old time Irish game. I told them that I barely knew the rules, but that I could play seven up, euchre or nearly any other American card game. But they insisted on my taking a hand, and I did so. One of the pages, who was standing at the back of my chair, watched my hand pretty closely, and the first time I made a bad play he said, sotto voce: 'Holy Moses, I niver see such a play in me loife. I wonder phwere the divil the mon cum from.' I paid no attention to him, of course, and went on with the game. The next time I made a bad play, and it wasn't very long, he again said, talking to himself, 'Bedad, niver did I see a mon play the loikes of that.' I began to be annoyed, but still I said nothing, although a man never likes to hear it said that he plays a game badly, but the man was talking to himself and meant no harm. However, when he broke out the third time I could contain myself no longer. I turned around and said, "Look here, my friend, are you playing these cards, or am I?" The Irishman looked at me for a moment, and then said, 'Nayther uv us, your honor, savin your prisince, sor.'

"I joined the rest of them in the laugh, and said, 'Well, boys, order up; that puts 'em on me.'"—Cincinnati Tribune.

HE KNEW JERSEY EGGS.

The Wise Printer Could Tell by Their Size and Shape.

Two printers lunched at a Park row restaurant the other day. One ordered "beef and" and the other two boiled eggs. When the eggs were placed before the one who ordered them, he said to his companion, "Why, those are Jersey eggs."

"How do you know they are Jersey eggs? They might have been laid in Pennsylvania or Kentucky for all you know."

"Well, I guess not. Those eggs came from Jersey, and I know it."

To prove it the proprietor was called into the discussion, and when asked he said the eggs were Jersey eggs.

Then the egg eater explained: "Over in Jersey the farmers, or some of them at least, use a board with holes, large and small, bored in it. All eggs that will go through the small holes are sent to market, and those which will only go through the large holes are reserved for home consumption."

Another printer devised a scheme for procuring good butter at his boarding house table. The landlady had two tables for her guests ranged one each side of a large room. At one the women boarders and married couples sat, while at the other table the bachelors were placed. At the women's table there was always good butter, but at the other the butter was emphatically inferior. A printer boarder suffered long and patiently, but at last he rebelled. He went to the dining room just before dinner one evening and changed the butter from one table to the other. A howl from the women's table shortly after had the desired effect.

The butter was of equally good quality at both tables thereafter.—New York Journal.

Ingalls on His Defeat.

Ex-Senator Ingalls, speaking of his defeat at Topeka in 1890 when he was a candidate for re-election, said: "When the returns came in and I saw how overwhelming my defeat was and what it meant to me—the end of 18 years' service in the American senate, possibly the end of my public life—I confess that agony was in my soul. It was a beautiful day. Everybody was watching me to see how I was going to take it—all my family. It was a tragic hour. I went over to my pasture and walked through the withered wood. There in a little grassy glade, sheltered from the autumnal breeze, the sun shining coldly down, I opened the windows of my spirit and let that whole thing in on me, and commanded my fortitude. I sat there in that little dell until the struggle was over, until I was master of myself."

Shorthorn and Scrub Steers.

The Kansas agricultural experiment station has completed a comparative list of Shorthorn and "scrub" steers. The results are more favorable to the "scrubs" than would have been expected by most. The Shorthorns gained more on full feed, and at a slightly less cost. The "scrubs" did better than the Shorthorns on pasture and during one winter when they were "roughed through."

Uruguay was named from the river which flows through it.

James R. Garfield, of Mentor, was nominated at Warren Tuesday for Senator from the 24th and 26th joint district. His nomination came on the anniversary of the day his father was shot.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean (Repub.) says what it should not be necessary to remind an intelligent people of, that "the friends of silver are not asking for cheap or worthless money. They want silver just as it has been, as good as gold. After all the howl about its worthlessness, the silver still buys as much meat and bread and groceries as its aristocratic yellow brother does, and it is far more popular with the common people."

The consolidated return from over 4000 experts and 20,000 farmers to the Ohio Department of Agriculture show that the average cost of raising an acre of wheat in New England is about $20, in the Middle States $18, in the Southern States $11, in the Western States $11, in the Mountain States $16, and in the Pacific States $12. In New England an acre of corn costs $28, in the Middle States $21, in the Southern States $12, in the Western States $11, in the Mountain States $13, and in the Pacific States $18. The total average cost of an acre of wheat is $11.48 and of corn $11.81. The average report placed the average value of wheat at $8 16 per acre and corn at $8 21 per acre, which does not, however, include the straw and fodder.

Wool is higher to-day than it was a year ago. It will be considerably higher than it is now in a few months, or as soon as the buyers have "sweated" the growers who have to sell as soon as shearing is over. Woolen mills are starting up all over the country, and the wool industry, like all other industries under Democratic good times, will soon be a blooming reality. Under the wise administration of public affairs by President Cleveland, the country is rapidly recovering from the disastrous depression and almost total destruction brought upon it by the extravagance and inefficiency of the Harrison administration and the billion dollar Congress. The ruin was so nearly complete that the recovery has naturally been slow, but the improvement is quite noticeable, and from this on will be more rapid and substantial. The calamity howling Republicans have been compelled to quit their croaking. Their occupation is gone. Prosperity marks every avenue of business, and real old-fashioned Democratic good times are in store for all.

The Pittsburg Dispatch, which until lately has been in the McKinley style of political warfare, i. e., calamity wailing, has, like McKinley's personal organ at Chicago, the Times-Herald, abandoned its absurd course, as evidenced by the following quotation from the Dispatch. "In the aggregate 100,000 men in and around Pittsburg have felt in a practical way the effect of the improvement in business, actual and prospective."

The Pittsburg Post makes the following fit comment upon the Dispatch's expression: "What these same workmen 'felt' under the McKinley law was illustrated by the Homestead strike and lock out of 1892, the riots there, and the assembling of the National Guard of Pennsylvania to hold labor under martial law. These are Wilson times. Those times were McKinley's. The Napoleonic has quit talking calamity and tariff in his speeches, and inclines to a Sunday school order of eloquence."

The Nicaragua canal commission having finished its examination of the route of the canal as previously surveyed has gone to Colan to ascertain what has been accomplished on Panama canal, in which so many millions of dollars have been sunk by the French people. The people of this country, however, care nothing for the Panama project. They are interested only in the Nicaragua enterprise and are anxious to hear the report of the commission. If it is favorable, as there is every reason to believe it will be, the construction of the Nicaragua canal is assured, because the Democratic party has in its national platform declared in favor of it, and it is a well known fact that President Cleveland desires such action before the expiration of his term of office as will make the canal a certainty. It is safe, therefore, to say that he will in the event of a favorable report from the committee urge Congress to pass a bill authorizing the government to assist in the construction of the canal.

Japan has had nearly as tough a time thrashing the 4,000,000 Formosans as she had overcoming the 400,000,000 Chinese. If the Formosans were even one-tenth as numerous as the Chinese, Japan would not be able to beat them at all. They are wild men, of Malay stock, whom the whole force of the Chinese empire has never been able to subdue.

Judged by the amount of its silver production, the United States ought to furnish a third of the money to meet the Chinese loan. We mine annually 84 per cent of the world's silver, and are therefore the largest silver producer in the world. Mexico comes next, producing 88 per cent of the world's silver.

The London county council has secured possession of a number of street railways in the city and will superintend the construction of model tenement houses, which it will rent to occupants. Thus London will have municipal street railways and municipal tenement houses.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Gave Strength and Courage to Work.

"I was in such condition I could not walk even about the house to attend to household duties and care for my children and family. I did not have the strength of a child. I was treated by several physicians, who pronounced my trouble Scrofula and Female Weakness. I could eat only a slice of bread and drink a cup of tea, three times a day. Sometimes I could stand a soft boiled egg for dinner. I became reduced to skin and bones; at last they had to draw me about the house seated in a rocking chair. I was in a terrible state when my husband, having noticed advertisements of Hood's Sarsaparilla, urged upon me to give it trial. After taking one bottle I received sufficient benefit to know that I had at last found the right medicine. I have now taken several bottles and am able to

No greeting passed between them. They stared wonderingly into each other's eyes, each questioning the other's wraithlike identity.

"I heard you call," Hilgard said. "Is it possible that you are alone in this place?"

"No," she replied, feebly rousing herself. "My brother is here with Mrs. Denny. They are not far away."

"Your brother is here—not far away?" he repeated. A cold despair came over him. There was nothing now but to tell her the truth. In her unconsciousness of its significance she would decide between them, and he would abide the issue. He leaned against the wall of the drift, wiping away the drops of moisture from his temples. The short, damp locks that clung to his forehead were massed like the hair on an antique medallion.

"You did not know me?" he asked.

"No. I could not see your face."

"I am not showing my face here. I am a spy in the enemy's camp. Your brother will hear the result of my discoveries in a few days from my lawyers."

It was roughly said, but the facts were rough facts, and he could not justify or explain himself to her, except at the expense of her brother.

"Must I tell him that you are here?" she asked.

"I suppose so, if you are a loyal sister."

"But I would never have known it if you had not come when I called. My candle fell and went out. I was alone in this awful darkness."

"But some one else would have come if I hadn't. You need not be grateful for that. Your brother would have found you here."

"But I could not have endured it a moment longer!"

"Oh, yes, you would have endured it. I need not have come."

"Why did you come, then?"

"I don't know," he said. "I was a fool to come. Why does a man come, when he hears a woman's voice that he knows—in trouble?"

He was groping about on the floor of the drift in search of her candle, and now, kneeling beside her, he lit it by his own and held it toward her. Their sad, illumined eyes met.

"How your hand trembles! Were you so frightened?" he asked.

"Yes. Does it seem very silly to you? My strength seemed all going away."

It was madness for him to stay, but he could not leave her, pale and dazed and helpless as she was.

"Let me fix you a better seat." He moved the rough boards on which she was sitting to make a support for her back.

"Oh, please, go and get out of the mine!" she entreated, with voice and eyes more than with words.

"But I cannot get out until the next change of shifts. I have taken the place of one of the miners on this shift. Besides I have not finished what I came for."

"Why do you call yourself a spy? Are you doing anything you are ashamed of?" she asked, with childlike directness.

"I am a little ashamed of the way I am doing it," he replied, with equal directness, "but not of the thing I am doing."

"And will it injure my brother—what you are doing?"

"Not unless the truth will injure him. I am trying to find out the truth."

"But why should you come in this way to find it out? Surely my brother wants to know it, too, if it is about this quarrel."

It was a home question. He could only answer:

"Your brother is very sure that he knows the truth already. I want to be sure too. I am not asking you not to tell him I am here. I have taken the risks."

"What are the risks?" she asked quickly.

"They are of no consequence compared with the thing to be done. I must not stay."

"Ah," she cried, with an accent of terror, "they are here!"

A light showed at the dark opening above the incline, and the thin stream of Mrs. Denny's chatter trickled faintly on the silence.

Cecil put out both candles with a flap of her long cloak.

"Oh, will you go?"

Hilgard heard her whisper and felt her hands groping for him in the darkness and pushing him from her. He took the timid hands in his and pressed them to his lips, and then stumbled dizzily away through the blackness.

A proposition from her companions to prolong their wanderings until they had reached the barricade was opposed by Cecil with all the strength her adventure had left her, but when it appeared that their way lay along the same drift in a direction opposite that by which Hilgard had made his retreat she offered no further objection. Her silence was sufficiently explainable by the fright she had had in the darkness.

The drift led to another smaller ore chamber, where miners were at work picking down the heavy gray sand and shoveling it into the tram cars. Conrath explained that this "stope" was in the new strike, claimed by the Led Horse, and that the barricade guarded the drift just beyond.

"I suppose it doesn't make so much difference whom the ore belongs to," Mrs. Denny commented lightly. "It's a question of who gets it first. Passez, passez! You needn't stop to expostulate. I am not a mining expert."

Conrath looked excessively annoyed, but refrained from defining his position to this cheerful nonprofessional observer. As they entered the low passage they found themselves face to face with a wall of solid upright timbering which closed its farther end, and in the midst of a silent group of men, seated along the side walls of the drift on blankets and empty powder kegs.

The barricade was pierced at about the height of a man's shoulders with small round loopholes. Two miners' candlesticks were stuck in the timbers, high above the heads of the guard, who lounged, with their rifles across their knees, the steel barrels glistening in the light.

Cecil's fascinated gaze rested on this significant group. The figures were so immovable and indifferent of face and attitude, so commonplace in type, that she but slowly grasped the meaning of their presence there. These, then, were the risks that were of no consequence!

Turning her pale face toward her brother, she asked, "Is this what you have brought us to see?"

"I thought you knew what a barricade is!"

"I never knew! I knew—I thought it was that"—pointing to the wall of timber—"but not this!" She looked toward the silent group of men, each holding his rifle with a careless grasp.

"You wouldn't make a good miner's wife, Cecil," said Mrs. Denny, and a slow smile went round among the men.

"Hark," said Conrath. They were still facing the barricade, and the dull thud of picks far off in the wall of rock sounded just in front of them. "Do you hear them at work? Now turn the other way." The sound came again, precisely in front. "They are a long way off yet. Can you make out how they are going to strike us, boys?" Conrath asked of the guard.

"You can't tell for sure, the rock is so deceivin, but they seem to be comin straight for the end of the drift."

"Who are they? Who are coming?" Cecil demanded.

"The Led Horses, my dear. They may blast through any day or night, but they'll find we've blocked their little game."

"What is their game?" Mrs. Denny inquired.

"They claim our new strike, and from the sound they seem to be coming for it as fast as they can!"

Cecil locked her arms in the folds of her long, shrouding cloak, and a nervous shudder made her tremble from head to foot.

"Poor little girl!" said Conrath, putting his arm around her shoulders. "I ought to have taken you straight home after the fright you got in the drift."

"Why, do you know," said Mrs. Denny, looking a little pale herself, "I think this is awfully interesting. I'd no idea that beauteous young Hilgard was such a brigand. Just fancy, only two nights ago you were dancing with him, Cecil!"

"What?" said Conrath, turning his sister roughly toward him with the hand that rested on her shoulder. She moved away and stood before him, looking at him, her straightened brows accenting the distress in her upraised eyes.

"Why should I not dance with him? In this place you all suspect each other and accuse each other of everything. He accuses you. Shall Mrs. Denny on that account refuse to dance with you?"

She spoke in a very low voice, but Conrath replied quite audibly, "Don't be a fool, Cecil!"

"Oh," she said, letting her arms fall before her desperately, "it is all the wildest, wildest folly that any one ever heard of! Men fighting about money that isn't even their own! Why, this is not mining. It is murder!"

"We're not fighting," Conrath replied. "Half the mines in the camp are showing their teeth at each other. It's the way to prevent fighting. If they keep on their own ground, there won't be any trouble, but," turning to Mrs. Denny, with a darkening look, "if I catch that 'beauteous' friend of yours on my ground he'll be apt to get his beauty spoiled."

On their way back along the drift they were warned by a spark of light and a distant rumbling that a car was approaching along the tram road. They stopped, and lowering their candles stood close against the sloping wall while the car passed. It was at the entrance to another dark gallery, and as the car rolled on, the warm wind of its passage making their candles flare, it left them face to face with a miner, who had also been overtaken at the junction of the drifts. He was tall, and his face was in deep shadow from the candle fastened in the crown of his hat. He stepped back into the side drift, pulling his hat brim down.

"Who was that?" Mrs. Denny asked.

"I didn't notice him," Conrath replied. "One of the Cornish men on the last shift. I don't know all their faces."

"He doesn't walk like a Cornish man," said Mrs. Denny, looking after him, "and his hand was the hand of a gentleman." They moved on a few paces in silence. Cecil flagged a little behind the others, and then dropped to the floor of the drift in a dead faint.

It was the air, they said, and the nervous shock she had suffered while alone in the ore chamber.

She let them explain it as they would, only begging to be left to recover herself quietly in her own room.

When the little stir of Mrs. Denny's departure had subsided and the house was once more silent, Cecil rose, still pale and shuddering with slight, successive chills, and sought the snug warmth of the kitchen. It was early twilight, but a lamp had been lit on the shelf above the ironing table, where the maid was at work, rubbing and stretching her starched cuffs, and clapping the iron down at intervals on its stand. From time to time she bestowed a glance of sympathy on her young mistress' dejected figure, crouching by the stove, her hands extended toward the steam from the kettle.

"Molly, if anything should happen at the mine, would the engine stop right away?" Cecil asked, after a long silence.

"Why, yes, miss, if anything broke."

"No, I mean if any one were hurt."

"Well, if 'twas one of the men, maybe they wouldn't stop," said Molly, gravely lifting a fresh iron from the stove, and inverting it close to her glowing cheek. "The pumpin engine don't never stop, unless somethin breaks, or the mine shuts down for good and all."

"But if it were—if anything should happen to my brother?"

"They'd stop, if the superintendent was hurt. Of course they would, miss."

"The engine would stop?" Miss Cecil repeated, lifting her head from the supporting hand on which it had rested.

"Yes, miss, it would."

They were both silent, while Cecil seemed to listen. "Mr. Conrath is not underground, is he, miss?"

"No; he went down to the camp with Mrs. Denny. Will you open the door a moment, Molly?"

Molly opened the door and stood against it, folding her bare arms in her apron, a warm, bright figure, with the gray, cold sky of twilight behind her. The heavy heart beats of the engine came distinctly from the shafthouse. Cecil went to the door and stood beside Molly, looking out at the dull sky and the new, unpainted buildings, crudely set in the low toned landscape of evening.

"Do you hear the other engine?" Cecil asked, after a moment's doubtful listening.

"The one over yon, miss? I hear it plain. Wait now. It comes faintlike between. Was you thinkin anything would be happenin?"

"I'm always thinking something will happen," said Cecil, a deep sigh following her long suspended breath.

"Yes; there's a mort o' trouble with them mines. 'Most every day some of 'em gets hurt. They gets a bucket dropped on their heads, or a rope breaks, or a blast goes off, or they sets a kag o' that giant on the stove to warm it, and it goes off on 'em and tears everything to pieces."

"What is 'giant,' Molly?"

"It's a kind of powder, miss—awful innocent lookin stuff, like cold grease—but it do send a lot o' them poor fellows out o' the world! They gets careless, that's what the companies says."

"Do you know anybody in the mines, Molly?"

"Why, yes, miss. My brother's on the Led Horse, and I know another o' the boys across the gulch."

"Molly, how strange that is!"

"Is it, miss? Sure, I don't know why. Tom's been over there since ever Mr West come. He worked under him in Deadwood. He likes Mr. West first rate, and he likes Mr. Hilgard."

"Who put Mr. West in, do you know?"

"Mr. Hilgard, miss. They was a loafin, drinkin set over there when he come out from the east to take holt, and he couldn't make nothin of 'em, and so he clears out the whole lot of 'em, and Gashwiler at the head of 'em, and the worst one of all, to put in Mr. West and a new gang o' men."

"Gashwiler—do you mean our captain?"

"I do, miss!"

"Oh, Molly, I never knew that! Shut the door. I'm so cold! I never knew it!" she repeated, gazing at Molly desolately.

"It might be you didn't miss, but it's the truth. Mr. Conrath maybe'd pack me out of the house for sayin it, but it's my belief that Gashwiler's makin the whole trouble between 'em. He knows the Led Horse, every inch of it, miss, and where their ore is, just's I could come in here and lay my hand on the flour barrel in the dark."

Again in silence they listened to the beat of the engines.

"When do the men on the 3 o'clock shift come up, Molly?"

"At 11 o'clock, miss."

"Why, how long they stay down there!"

"Eight hours it is above ground and eight below. I bet it seems long to them that's below!"

"Oh!" said Cecil, lifting her hands, and pressing them on the top of her head. "I wish they would all resign!"

CHAPTER VIII.

Cecil's life at the mine was a lonely one. Even the ladies who lived in the populous parts of the camp struggled vainly to fulfil duty that important feminine rite, the exchange of calls. There were difficulties of roads and of weather, and of finding the missing houses of acquaintances, which, in the progressive state of the city topography, had been unexpectedly shunted off into other streets. A new street had barely time to be named and numbered before it was moved backward or forward, or obliterated altogether, in the intermittent attempts of the city government to reconcile United States patents with "jumpers'" claims.

Cecil, two miles from the postoffice, at an isolated mine, was out of the reach of all but the most persevering efforts of her new friends. In truth, there were not many of them. Cecil was a shy girl, just out of school, with a habit of showing surprise at a great many things that were taken as a matter of course in the camp. Hilgard had one consolation in his exile from all chance of her favor. There was no one else who could boast of it.

The kitchen and parlor at the Shoshone were separated from each other only by a short flight of steps and a square, dark passage, which opened also into Conrath's office. Mistress and maid, living so near together, and being of nearly the same age, did not pretend to a very formal relation. The sounds from the kitchen plainly described to Cecil, in the parlor, the nature of Molly's operations. When they were loud and urgent; when Molly took the field with her canvas apron girt round her hips and her washtubs in solid array; when armfuls of wood thundered into the woodbin, or crockery rattled, or resonant tins responded to her vigorous touch, the young mistress kept within her own premises, but when footsteps trod peacefully to and fro between the stove and the ironing table, and the clap of the iron sounded at intervals, or when apples bumped comfortably from the pan on Molly's knees to the one on the floor beside her, Cecil ventured out with her sewing, or sat idle on the steps nursing her arms in her lap and watching Molly's monotonous movements with the pleased, curious content of a child.

These visits had increased somewhat in frequency since Miss Conrath's discovery that the affections of her maid were temporarily deposited in the Led Horse.

Molly had silently noted this fact and hinted it to her brother and to a tall young timberman who crossed the gulch with him occasionally and spent an evening in the Shoshone kitchen. The young timberman had been one of the two men at the cranks who had hoisted Hilgard to the surface on the morning of his first meeting with Miss Conrath. He recalled this incident for Molly's benefit, who gave it its full value and beamed over it with the broadest satisfaction.

"Sure I could see a good way out of it," was her hearty if somewhat premature suggestion. "Let them consolidate the mines and put Mr. Hilgard over 'em both, and let her choose which side of the gulch she'd live. I wouldn't live over there," Molly continued, indicating, with a deprecative toss of her head, the Led Horse side of the gulch, "for all you've got in the mine."

"It's not much, thin!" Tom interposed confidentially.

"The water is that hard it's enough to take the skin off your hands," Molly continued, "and the ground's as black as the stove, with the crock off o' thim burnt woods, and every man o' you leavin the print of his fut on the floors. Sure I might be on me knees from mornin to night, and they'd never look clean!"

"You'd not be scrubbin floors if you was over there!" the young timberman remarked, with emphasis that brought the color into Molly's cheeks.

"And who'd be doin it for me?" she asked in a high voice. "Is it the men that scrubs the floor over there and the women that works underground?"

Cecil, alone in the silent parlor, heard the burst of boyish laughter that followed this sally, and said to herself, rather wistfully, that the Shoshone kitchen was much the most cheerful room in the house.

On the days after these evening visits Molly was unusually communicative and had a great deal of information to give on the progress of the dispute between the mines. Cecil did not always restrain her when she sometimes inadvertently passed from an attitude of respectful neutrality to one of undisguised enthusiasm for the side of the Led Horse. It was best to hear both sides, Cecil said to herself, but she heard very little on the side of the Shoshone in these days.

It was becoming more and more difficult to talk to her brother of his affairs and to ask for his confidence. He seemed unusually preoccupied. He often came home late at night, having dined down town and breakfasted alone in the long parlor at 10 or 11 o'clock the next morning. Cecil, taking her walk on the windy porch, would run in for a moment to pour his coffee, perching opposite him with her hat on and the wings of her cloak thrown back from her pretty arms. She would carry his cup round the table to him, bestowing the kiss of custom on his pale, unshaven cheek. He received it generally with fraternal indifference, but sometimes he would pull her down on the broad arm of his chair, pinch her small chin and tell her, with careless hyperbole, that she was the prettiest girl west of the Mississippi, and she would scold him for drinking such very black coffee in such a large cup.

"Look at your hand. How it shakes, you stupid boy! A man never knows how to take care of his health, and you won't let me take care of yours for you."

"Take care of your own, Ceey," he would say. "You were always the best of the whole lot of us."

Once she reminded him of an old promise to ride with her every day in the valley and read aloud to her in the evenings.

"If we don't begin soon," she complained, "the valley will be covered with snow. I haven't had my habit on for six weeks, and I've read everything in the house, through and through, alone here by myself all day long."

"Poor little Ceey! It is a dull cage for such a pretty bird," Conrath would reply. "Never mind, when Shoshone stock is up to 30, we'll have some good horses, and we'll go east every winter and have our friends out here in summer and a dinner party twice a week. You could go back at any time, you know, if you're getting tired of it."

"You know I don't want to go back or to have dinner parties, or anything like that. I only wish you would treat me more—more as if I could be trusted to know about things."

"About what things, for instance?"

"About your troubles with the Led Horse. Have they blasted through?"

"No, they haven't yet. You've never forgotten that barricade, Ceey. Now you see how impossible it would be to tell you things as you say. The simplest thing would seem to you quite frightful. Girls ought not to know what is going on in a place like this. That's one reason why I am not so much troubled about your loneliness. It's better for you not to hear all the gossip of the camp. It would make you unhappy."

This was the most intimate conversation they had had for weeks. A few days afterward Molly informed her mistress that the Led Horse had blasted through on a level with the Shoshone barricade. Cecil gave a gasp at this news. Molly, however, assured her that everything was peaceable. The Led Horse had no guard and no barricade except the loose rock that had fallen with the last blast, but its lawyers had gone down to the session of the district court at D—— with important testimony, and by this time the injunction was virtually granted. That was probably the reason why Conrath had turned so silent, and was busier than ever, Cecil thought. She still persisted in the belief that Gashwiler was responsible, and that her brother had been deceived up to the point of a distressing awakening from his costly delusion.

It was nearly the middle of September. The season was over, when daily the dry winds whirled across the porch shook the loose sash and flinging a cloud of yellow dust against the pane carried their rude message from house to house of the little settlement, and on along the white road to the camp. The season of rains was over, when daily the cold showers hurtled on the roof, and blotted out the valley, when wild flowers blossomed on the pass and lined the canyons with a phantasmal beauty. The late, passionless summer had come to the weary, tempestuous year, just as summer elsewhere was taking her leave. Was this a place for men, Cecil murmured to herself in her lonely walks, when even the grass, that commonest vegetable joy, gave up the ghost and withered in the autumn, as sparse and feeble as in the earliest spring?

The day after the news of the injunction Cecil resolved once more to approach her brother on the subject of his troubles. She lay in the hammock, which was stretched across the long room, her slippered feet to the fire, the light from the low window shining on the top of her cushioned head, listening for the clink of a horse's hoof on the frozen ground. She listened and waited, until sunset faded into twilight and lamps were lit. Dinner was indefinitely postponed, and Cecil took a slight meal and a lonely cup of tea by the fire. With a book in one hand she read and sipped her tea and listened alternately. She heard the outer door of the kitchen shut. Silence followed—absolute silence all over the house.

It was very strange of Molly to have gone out without permission at that hour, leaving her mistress alone in the house. When the girl came in, fully two hours afterward, Cecil took no notice of her, not venturing to speak while she felt hurt and vexed. Molly, however, was too much excited to remark her mistress' mood. Her hair was disordered, and her cheeks were flushed and shining with wind dried tears. She came straight to the fire, kneeling on the rug and asking in a loud whisper:

"Is Mr. Conrath home yet?"

"You know that he is not," Cecil replied, without looking up from her book.

"There's something I must tell you, Miss Cecil, if I was to leave the house tonight."

"You seem to have done that already, Molly, without regard to me."

Then, as Molly turned her face away and put her apron to her eyes, Cecil abandoned her attempt at dignity and leaned toward the girl impulsively.

"Why, Molly, what is it?" she said, putting her hands on her shoulders and pulling her toward her. "What are you crying about?"

Molly put down her apron.

"You've a right to know it, miss," she sobbed, "if it is your own brother, and Tom isn't one to meddle except to save trouble. Mr. Conrath maybe would kill me for speakin. Gashwiler would anyway!"

On a Mustard Foundation

Norwich as a city owes its success to mustard. The commercial importance of the town was at one time declining very rapidly, but the manufacture of the condiment by Messrs. Colman practically saved it. This industry employs more than 2200 men, women and children, and it is for the making of mustard that engines of many hundred horse power, driving scores of different machines, are constantly kept going. Mr. Colman's works have a river frontage of the best part of a mile, and cover at least 25 acres of ground.

Oh, Boston!

A funny incident—and not so funny, after all—occurred on the Fens the other afternoon. Two cyclists met unexpectedly. The woman did not turn to the right, and the man ran straight into her wheel, upsetting both. They scrambled to their feet, righted their bikes, and glared at each other for half a second. Then the man coolly slapped the woman's face, and jumping on his wheel rolled away with lightning speed. An eyewitness of the scene was ungallant enough to applaud the act, for, he said, it was deserved.—Boston Herald.

HOW TO TELL THE KEY.

Just Remember These Nonsense Lines for Sharps and Flats.

"Amateur musicians often somewhat embarrassed by the unexpected query as to what key a piece of music is in when playing in company," remarked a well known music teacher. "They can tell on a little reflection, but an array of four or more sharps or flats is apt to temporarily confuse the best of them."

"Here is a simple little guide or reminder which, if rehearsed a few times will always keep them ready and ready to make a quick response to such a question:

"In sharps just jot down this sentence, the capital letter beginning each word representing an additional sharp from one to six: 'God Deliver All Earth By Flood.' In flats the same rule obtains in connection with this amusing line: 'Fanny B... Eats Apple Dumplings Greedily.'"—Philadelphia Record.

MOTHERS

recovering from the illness attending childbirth, or who suffer from the effects of disorders, derangements and displacements of the womanly organs, will find relief and a permanent cure in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Taken during pregnancy, the "Prescription"

MAKES CHILDBIRTH EASY

by preparing the system for parturition, thus assisting Nature and shortening "labor." The painful ordeal of childbirth is robbed of its terrors, and the dangers thereof greatly lessened, to both mother and child. The period of confinement is also greatly shortened, the mother strengthened and built up, and an abundant secretion of nourishment for the child promoted. If is delicate, run-down, or overworked, it worries her husband as well as herself. This is the proper time to build up her strength and cure those weaknesses, or ailments, which are the cause of her trouble. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription dispels aches and pains, melancholy and nervousness, brings refreshing sleep and makes a new woman of her.

MRS. ABRAM LYON, of Lorraine, Jefferson Co., N. Y., writes: "I had been suffering from ulceration and falling of the womb, for several years, or since the birth of my youngest child. I consulted all the physicians around here and they gave me up and said there was no help for me. At last almost discouraged, I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and took five bottles. It is three years since and I have not had any return of the trouble. I feel very grateful, and feel that I owe you my life, for I do not think I should have been alive now if I had not taken your medicine."

to old times makes the housekeeper shudder. If she washed with safety, she had hard work; if she tried to make it easy, she made it dangerous. Pearline has made it safe as well as easy. It saves wear in washing clothes; it saves work in cleaning house; it does away with the Rub, Rub, Rubbing. Without Pearline, there is little done; with it, there is little to do.

HOW TO TELL THE KEY.

Just Remember These Nonsense Lines for Sharps and Flats.

"Amateur musicians often are somewhat embarrassed by the unexpected query as to what key a piece of music is in when playing in company," remarked a well known music teacher. "They can tell on a little reflection, but an array of four or five sharps or flats is apt to temporarily confuse the best of them."

"Here is a simple little guide or reminder which, if rehearsed a few times will always keep them right and ready to make a quick response to such a question:

"In sharps just jot down this sentence, the capital letter beginning each word representing an additional sharp from one to six: 'God Deluged All Earth By Flood.' In flats the same rule obtains in connection with this amusing line: 'Fanny Baker Eats Apple Dumplings Greedily.'"—Philadelphia Record.

Weak and Nervous

Describes the condition of thousands of people at this season. They have no appetite, cannot sleep, and complain of the prostrating effect of the warmer weather. This condition may be remedied by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which creates an appetite and tones up all the organs. It gives good health by making the blood pure.

Hood's Pills are the best after dinner pills, assist digestion, cure headache.

Force of Habit.

The genial captain of a steamer plying on one of our American rivers was appointed a vestryman in an Episcopal church in a city which lay at one end of his route.

One day shortly afterward it was reported to him, when on shore, that there was a leak in the church. He was accustomed to promptness, and on receipt of the message he went to the church, took a candle and started down into the cellar to find the leak, evidently thinking of the basement as the hull of the good ship Zion.

The captain himself tells the story with much apparent enjoyment of its humor.—Youth's Companion.

FARM · FIELD AND GARDEN

ABOUT GREEN MANURING.

When Humus Is Lacking, a Catch Crop Plowed Under Will Prove Satisfactory.

Green manuring is a good thing under certain conditions. Wherever the soil is deficient in humus it may be practiced to advantage. Usually we find a deficiency of vegetable matter in gravelly and light soils. As a rule, no regular crop should be plowed under. Catch crops of rye, buckwheat, clover and the like may often be used to advantage. For instance, a field upon which corn is raised this year, if the soil is light and lacks humus, might be sowed to rye just before the last cultivation, or, if the corn is cut early for ensilage, wheat or rye may be drilled in without the ground being plowed. In some parts of the country very favorable results are secured from sowing crimson clover after the last cultivation. We notice that in some localities this practice has not been successful.

The best crop to plow under is common red clover. Cut the first crop for hay, leave the stubble to start, and when headed out plow it under. As stated above, it is seldom a good practice to plow under a good crop simply for the manurial and physical benefits received. On land that is already full of vegetable matter a large growth of rye or buckwheat plowed under when green is very likely to sour the land, but in case it is plowed under it would be well to add a dressing of lime to correct the acidity.

If the green plants plowed under are the result of a catch or intermediate crop, then plow whenever the ground has to be prepared for the crop which has to be harvested, having no reference to the maturity of the manurial crop. In the last week or two of the growth of plants a vast quantity of valuable growth is developed, while the per cent of water is materially decreased; hence there is less danger of souring the land from plowing under fairly mature crops than from plowing under immature crops.

A liberal dressing of barn manures is likely to be far more beneficial than a crop plowed under, especially if it is one that is not a nitrogen gatherer. Rye, buckwheat and the like bring no plant food to the soil. They only serve as digesters—that is, they prepare the food for the other plants which are to follow—while clover and other leguminous plants not only digest and make more available the mineral matter in the soil, but they also bring a positive addition of nitrogen to the soil through the action of the living organisms on their roots.

Any crop may follow after plowing under green manures, although wheat or rye is likely to succeed best. A second clover crop plowed under about the 1st of September is a most satisfactory beginning for a successful wheat crop. —Country Gentleman.

Second Crop Potatoes.

At a meeting of Kansas farmers, in a paper read on "Potato Culture," the question of second crop seed was considered. The reader said: "In the south the second crop is raised without much difficulty. With us it is hard to get the sets to sprout. There is no doubt about the superiority for seed of potatoes that are in full vigor of growing when killed by the frost. Whether grown as a second crop in the south or a first crop in northern Dakota or from cold storage seed planted in Kansas I suspect does not matter much. What seems to be important is that growth shall have been arrested by frost when the potatoes are in

A Doctor's Uncollected Fee.

Several years ago I was under a Dr. Smithers of Galesburg, Ills. One day he was called to treat a patient who had been seized with a severe attack of colic. The patient was one of the richest business men in Galesburg, and was noted as being very penurious. Dr. Smithers found his patient hardly able to talk, but between his groans he managed to say to the physician, "Oh, doctor, I don't think you can do anything for me, but if you can save my life I will give you $500." Dr. Smithers smiled and started to administer relief. In a few minutes the patient remarked to the doctor that he did not think it was any use, but if he was cured he would owe him his life. Six months later Dr. Smithers sued him for a small fee of $3 for one visit.—Kansas City Journal.

Mrs. Rhodie Noah, of this place, was taken in the night with cramping pains and the next day diarrhoea set in. She took half a bottle of blackberry cordial but got no relief. She then sent to me to see if I had anything that would help her. I sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and the first dose relieved her. Another of our neighbors had been sick for about a week and had tried different remedies for diarrhoea but kept getting worse. I sent him this same remedy. Only four doses of it were required to cure him. He says he owes his recovery to this wonderful remedy.—Mrs. Mary Sidley, Sidney, Mich. For sale by Melville Bros., next to P. O.; C. W. In the vicinity of Boquet, Westmoreland Co., Pa., almost any one can tell you how to cure a lame back or stiff neck. They dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on the affected parts and in one or two days the trouble has disappeared. This same treatment will promptly cure a pain in the side or chest. Mr. E. M. Curing Sorghum Hay.

After mowing allow the sorghum to lie on the ground sufficiently long to dry out at the end of the blades. If the crop is thick, it should be turned over on the ground to expose the bottom portion of the cutting to the sun for a short time. Usually one full day's sun is required to dry it sufficiently to allow it to be put into the cock. The hay cocks may be 5 feet high and 4 feet in diameter, of the shape of an old fashioned beehive.

All the hay that is cocked in this manner should be well settled as it is laid on the pile. After having constructed it the proper height, take the loose sorghum away from the sides, leaving a neat pile of hay that will turn water in case it should rain. Allow it to remain in this condition for two or three days for fermentation to take place, which is evidenced by the heating and the deposits of moisture upon the interior parts of the cock. When thoroughly warm and before the hay loses its natural color, open the cocks and expose the hay to four or six hours' sun, according to the weight of the crop to the acre and the size of the stalks. Then the fodder is ready to haul to the barn or be placed in stacks, where it may safely be expected to remain without molding or heating further.—Prairie Farmer.

A DELAYED BRIDE.

She Wouldn't Be Wedded Till the Conditions Were All Right.

The company waited, but the bride was not ready. A bridesmaid was sent to notify her that George Edward was in the oriel room and the band under the stairs waiting to strike up the first strains of the wedding march.

"I don't care," she pouted as she threw herself disconsolately on a divan, to the great danger of her veil: "I'm not going to be unlucky all my life if I can help it. Dear, dear, why didn't I remember it sooner."

"Remember what, dear?" inquired the perplexed bridesmaid

"Why, that everything I have on is new. I did remember that if

"Married in white,
You have chosen all right,

but I forgot the other:

"Something old and something new,
Or your choice you'll surely rue.

Every stitch I have on is new, and I just will not stir a step until I have something old added to my dress."

"Take my handkerchief," suggested one of the girls.

"What could I do with it?" whined the poor thing. "Brides don't have pockets; neither do they carry handkerchiefs in their hands. It would look as if I expected to cry."

"I have a happy thought," said the bridesmaid. "Exchange shoes with me."

"They won't fit. My feet are two sizes smaller than yours."

"Thanks, awfully. Haven't you a pair of your own Cinderellas?"

"Yes, I have," said the bride, jumping up in a hurry. "Your head is level, dear. Look in the pink box in the chiffonier, or in the blue one. Oh, they won't do, they're so awfully soiled!"

"Get me some bread crumbs and a box of powder," said a practical soul in the party. "Quick! I'll have them white in a jiffy."

"You're just dear," said the grateful bride. "Now I shall feel that I am properly married, and that everything has been done to insure my future happiness. Just one thing more for luck:

"Hurtle a shoe
After me—do."

When the bride descended the stairs leaning on the arm of George Edward, the sweet serenity of her face was a subject of favorable comment. Her friends felt that she was not entering unprepared upon the future awaiting her, and she felt that way herself.—Detroit Free Press.

Millinery Hints.

The new English walking hat is of stylish shape; it has a crown larger at the top than the bottom, and a rolled brim shaped somewhat like those of the Beau Brummel silk hats; a band of velvet or silk and two sharp-pointed ends constitute the trimming. Sometimes a quill is stuck in the band.

The sailor shape in fancy straw hat has lost none of its prestige. The newest idea is to almost conceal the brim with a quantity of flowers and those of different kinds. For instance, a sailor of light brown satin straw had a great red rose set in front; continuing around the crown were tufts of vari colored leaves and great bunches of violets.

In one of the largest and richest churches of B—— one Sunday the minster was very much disturbed during his prayer by the untimely shaking down of one of the large furnaces.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching Consumption, tried without result everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in Coughs and Colds. Free trial bottles at Melville's Drug Store. A DOCTOR'S YARN.

It Is of Two Sisters Who Killed Their Grandfather to Ease His Pain.

This is a bit of a true story a physician told me the other day, and it struck me as being the text for a fascinating story of the Sherlock Holmes sort. We were talking of the advisability of putting hopelessly ill persons out of their misery as soon as possible. Dr. B. didn't believe in it.

"I was asked to do it once," he said. "Two sisters asked me to kill their grandfather, whom I was attending. He was old and could not recover. They seemed simply to pity his pain. I refused. Next morning when I called the man was dead. The nurse told me the sisters had sent her out on an errand. When she returned the windows of the sick room were open. There was a strong odor of chloroform in the room and the man was dead."

"And what did you do?" was asked.

"Nothing. The elder sister is now under the care of a specialist in nervous diseases. She cannot sleep. She will not allow herself to be alone a moment, and she keeps the gas burning in her room all night. I think she will end in a madhouse."

Isn't that a priceless bit for some author's notebook?—Washington Post.

Housekeeping at Samoa.

Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson says that housekeeping in Samoa was not so idyllic as it might seem. Her supplies came from New Zealand or Australia once a month, so that if she wanted a bottle of bluing or a bag of flour, for instance, she had to send half across the Pacific to get it. The native diet was all well enough for a few weeks, but as it consisted almost solely of fruit and fish it began to pall on European palates. Housekeeping in this South Sea paradise (of romances) had other drawbacks, particularly in the matter of expense, which was fully six or seven times as great, Mrs. Stevenson says, as living on a corresponding scale in San Francisco. As for society, "there's more of it to the square inch in Samoa than in any other place I know," says Mrs. Stevenson, but it appears to be largely of the living picture kind.

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whiskey nor other intoxicant, but acts as a tonic and alterative. It acts mildly on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone to the organs, thereby aiding Nature in the performance of the functions. Electric Bitters is an excellent appetizer and aids digestion. Old People find it just exactly what they need. Price fifty cents per bottle at Melville's Drug Store.

The Prince of Monaco has left his realm and embarked with a large and scientific suite on board his yacht, the Princesse Alice. The intention is to make a trip first to Lisbon, and from thence to proceed to the most promising spot on the Atlantic Ocean, to carry on submarine researches, oceanographic and zoologic. The prince has already been very successful in his endeavors in other parts, and no doubt will be equally so on the spots where he is going to, and which, upon leaving, he may fairly claim to be under the Monaco sphere of influence.

Narcoti-Cure

Cures the Tobacco Habit In 4 to 10 Days, or Money Refunded.

Use All the Tobacco You Want Till Your "Craving" is Gone.

NARCOTI-CURE is the only remedy in the world that acts directly on the nerves, and drives the nicotine from the system in from four to ten days. It leaves the patient in better health than before taking, and is warranted free from any injurious ingredients.

NARCOTI-CURE is popular because it allows the patient to use all the tobacco he wants while under treatment, or until the "craving" and "hankering" are gone. It is then no sacrifice to throw away tobacco forever.

NARCOTI-CURE is sold at the uniform price of $5.00 a bottle, and one bottle cures.

Money refunded if a cure is not affected when taken according to directions.

Of Amherst, Mass., Chewed Tobacco for 46 Years, and was Cured by Narcoti-Cure.

AMHERST, MASS., February 8, 1895.
THE NARCOTI CHEMICAL CO.,
Springfield, Mass.

Gentlemen:—Replying to yours of the 1st, would say that I have used tobacco for 46 years, and of late have consumed a 10-cent plug a day, besides smoking considerably. I commenced to use tobacco when I was only 11 years old, and have never been able to give up the habit until I took NARCOTI-CURE, although I have tried other so-called remedies without effect. After using your remedy four days, all "hankering" for chewing disappeared, and in four days more, smoking became unpleasant. I have no further desire for the weed, and experienced no bad effects, whatever. I am gaining in flesh, and feel better than I have for a long time. To all who wish to be free from the tobacco habit, I would say, use NARCOTI-CURE.

Yours truly,
W. N. WAITE.

If your druggist is unable to give you full particulars about NARCOTI-CURE, send to us for book of particulars free, or send $5.00 for a bottle by mail.

The board of trustees of the Lima Cycling club has taken hold of the new track in a business like way and the scheme is bound to be a success.

The board held another meeting last evening at which President Brice presided, and transacted some very important business. The new membership tickets have been issued and will be properly signed and ready for distribution this evening. Those who have already paid dues for this season either for membership in the Lima Cycling club or the United Cyclers Association are entitled to membership tickets, and may secure them upon application to F. E. Harman. Those who have not paid their dues may get tickets of any member of the board by paying the amount.

A committee consisting of Messrs. Crimmell, Harman and Reall was appointed by President Brice, last night to get figures on grand stand or bleachers, and to confer with the racing men in reference to the most suitable place to locate finish.

Messrs. Crimmell and Reall were also appointed a permanent committee to prepare programmes for the track events, appoint track officials for each race meet and to receive entries for races.

James Barhydt, who leaves this city to-morrow, tendered his resignation as a member of the board and as captain of the club. The resignation was accepted by the board, and Capt. Jim was tendered a vote of thanks by the members for his untiring efforts during his term office for the best interests of the organization. Messrs. W. J. Richie and H. F. Reel were elected members of the board of trustees vice Jas. Barhydt and Jas. Sullivan resigned, and Sim Stewart was elected captain of the club. All were elected by acclamation.

Mr. and Mrs. Sim Stewart are home from Canton, where they attended the State bicycle meet on July 4th. Harry Carnes and Ira Stewart are enroute home from the same place on their wheels. Mr. Mr. Stewart reports that class A riders were so thick on the track at Canton that their pedals locked wherever they bunched.

The professional class is now a sure go, as Sanger and Tyler have dropped from class B and with Johnson, Zimmerman, Banker and Wheeler and a few others who will, no doubt be compelled to become professional, that class cannot help but be a decided success.

Whenever a racing man races for prizes, it is seldom that the prizes are worth their listed value, and that is the main reason why the cash prizes are going to draw the fast riders.

A Prisoner Wanted at Lima Makes His Escaped at Mt. Cory.

Constable J. B. Taylor arrested Newton Williams at Benton Ridge yesterday afternoon on a warrant charging him with conveying tools to his brother, who is confined in the Allen county jail for forgery, so that he might be able to make his escape.

The constable with his prisoner drove over to Rawson and boarded the 3:55 o'clock train on the L. E. & W. for Lima. As the train neared Mt. Cory Williams said he wanted a drink of water and the constable went with him to the water tank. Suddenly the prisoner darted to the car door, opened it and sprang from the moving train, which had then commenced to slack its speed. The constable pulled the bell rope and stopped the train and at once started in pursuit of Williams. The race was kept up for about two miles. It caused considerable excitement among the people who witnessed the contest of speed, but not understanding what the trouble was they made no attempt to stop the fleeing man. The constable was no match for Williams when it came to a test of sprinting powers and was gradually distanced and was compelled to give up the chase and Williams is still at liberty.—Findlay Republican.

A CUT

To be Made in Y. M. C. A. Membership Rates,

Providing the List Can be Raised to Four Hundred. Committees Now at Work.

At a recent meeting of the Y. M. C. A. members it was proposed to reduce the full membership fee from $7.50 to $5.00 The proposition was freely discussed and finally it was determined to do it, provided there could be secured within the next thirty days enough young men as members to raise the number of regular members to four hundred, exclusive of juniors and sustaining members. From a financial point of view the change can only be made on that basis. When the number is reached the present membership will be placed on the same basis by an extension of time.

The Association is very desirous of placing the valuable and attractive privileges which it has in its new building within the reach of every young man in Lima. It wants all young men to enjoy the building, and thirty young men are actively canvassing the city to secure the required number. There certainly should be no trouble to succed in doing so.

It is to be hoped that all young men will meet this proposition of the Association half way and assist in thus popularizing the association.

Resolutions passed by Lima Lodge, No. 64, Ancient Order of United Workmen:

John A. White was born in Jay county, Ind., Sept. 28th, 1858: died June 16th, 1895, aged 36 years, 8 months and 18 days. His sickness was protracted and at times very painful, but his patience and resignation never failed him. He was a consistent member of the United Brethren church and a beloved brother in Lima Lodge, No. 64, A. O. U. W.: therefore,

Resolved, That as members of Lima Lodge, No. 64, Ancient Order of United Workmen, we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will; that we hereby express a sense of our loss in our brother's death, and extend to his bereaved family in all sincerity the watchwords of our order—viz: Charity, Hope and Protection—in the still greater loss which they have sustained.

Resolved, That our charter and altar be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days; that these resolutions be embodied in our minutes, a copy thereof sent to the widow of our deceased brother, and also presented to the dailies of our city for publication.

STREET TALK.

Two young men, one a resident of Lima, and the other his guest from out of town, were standing on the platform of a street car bound for the show ground on the Fourth, when a fashionably dressed girl entered the car at Market street and seated herself at the forward end. "A picture of innocence and beauty," remarked one of the young men, adjusting his tie. "Innocence," exclaimed the other, "I'd like to bet that if I go in and sit next to her she will open a conversation with me." The first speaker sized up the girl again and accepted the bet. His companion sauntered in, and to the amazement of the observer on the rear platform, the young lady smiled and spoke, and in a moment the couple were conversing as if they had known each other for years. The out of town young man only realized how he had been taken in when his companion introduced his sister as they all alighted and started toward the big tent.

The next big day for Lima will be next month, when the National Encampment of the Union Veterans' Union will be held in this city commencing on the sixth of August and continuing including the ninth. It is estimated that there will be at least 5,000 strangers in the city.

It may not be generally known that locomotives intended for passenger and express trains require as much training, in their way, for fast running as do race horses. When a new engine is taken out of the shops to be placed on the road, instead of putting it to the work it is intended for at once, it is run for two or three weeks on some shorter run, in order to train it, so to speak, for faster running. By this means all the bearings and journals connected with the running gear become settled to their work; for, should anything about the new machine not work harmoniously, there is ample time to adjust the defect.

The bicycle, which is rapidly reaching universal adoption as a means of locomotion, makes the settlement of its legal rights a matter of great importance and interest to wheelmen all over the country as well as those in Lima, where as yet no local legislation has been made. The courts of several States have decided that a bicycle is a vehicle and has the same rights on the public highway as any other carriage, and in Pennsylvania the court holds a bicycle liable for pike tolls. In many cities bicyclists have taken the right step in securing the passage of ordinances which prohibit the depositing on the streets of any iron, tin, bottles, glass, nails, tacks, block, wire, slab, bricks, lumber wood, sticks, stone, etc. Other sections added in their interest compel riders and drivers to keep to the right in meeting one another and allow passage on the left when overtaken by another, and riders to ring the bell twice when overtaking a vehicle and pass to the left. The provision regarding rubbish on streets is a good one, which deserved adoption on its merits alone, aside from the obviation of causes of needless injury to tires or a disastrous overturn.

Lima is one of the very few towns in the country in which riding on sidewalks is permitted under any circumstances In towns where wheelmen are compelled to keep off pavements the result has been the streets are kept cleaner and in better condition and with less accidents In many cities an annual tax of $1 is levied on all bicycles and the sum realized expended in bettering the streets.

THE NEBULAR THEORY.

How, According to It, the Sun and the Planets Were Formed.

The finite mind can hardly conceive of a time when there was neither sun nor planets, yet both the Bible and science teach us that such a state of affairs once actually existed. We have all read the Biblical account of creation, and not a few of us have spent valuable time reading learned essays on the condition of things in the time of "the beginning." It is not the object of this "note" to discuss the origin of the sun and the planets from a Biblical standpoint, nor do we mean to give a resume of scientific opinions on the subject. On the contrary, we shall confine our remarks to what is known as the "nebular hypothesis," or nebular theory of the origin of worlds and suns.

According to the opinion of the most learned astronomers, the "beginning" is ushered in with the existence throughout all space of an undefinable matter of substance called "nebula." This nebula was of such wonderful thinness that it is believed that millions of miles of it could have easily been compressed into a common thimble. The heavier portions gradually gathered around common centers after the lapse of ages and formed planets, suns and stars, the light and heat of the two latter being due to the clashing of their component atoms as they gravitate continually toward the center of the mass.

The nebula origin of the sun and incidentally of the planets also is thus finely set forth in a recent article by a well known British writer: The matter, or rather the gas which composes our sun, was once spread out to the farthest orbit of the outermost planets of our system—that is, to the planet Neptune From the orbit of Neptune this inconceivably thin mass began to converge, growing denser and denser and smaller and smaller as it gradually approached its existing dimensions. As it condensed, revolving upon its axis, the solar mist left behind it at intervals portions of cloudlike matter cast off from its equator

These masses of gas, undergoing a similar evolution to that of the sun, or central mass, have, with great slowness, hardened into what is now Jupiter, Saturn, the earth and the other planets Meanwhile the main central mass, always retreating, eventually formed the sun itself, the present chief luminary of our system of worlds.—St. Louis Republic.

On Catching Cold In Bed.

Mark Twain on a whole paper pointing out the appalling danger of going to bed as exemplified in bills of mortality. For one person who died out of his bed several hundred succumbed in bed, and now we have Mr. Ashby-Sterry drawing attention to the same thing. Hitherto he has hymned in graceful verse pantaletts, frills and the temperamental petticoat, and now, quantum mutatus ab illo Hectore, he lauds the pyjama. In a recent number of The Graphic he says:

"I have a theory that most people catch cold at night after they are in bed, and it is to this fact that I attribute a great deal of the violent colds, the bronchial catarrhs and influenza which have recently been so prevalent. The temperature goes down suddenly in the night, and people catch cold when they are asleep without knowing it. This evil is to be counteracted, not by piling on a lot of heavy blankets, but by wearing thick, close fitting garments of a pyjamable nature and warm socks on the feet. If this system were adopted, I am quite certain that it would be found beneficial."

There is common sense in this. People unquestionably may catch cold in bed, especially if there are at all restless and so kick the bedclothes off. In that event if only clad in a thin cotton nightshirt they are sure to catch cold, whereas if clad in pyjamas, not necessarily thick, but made of some woolen material, the chance of a chill is much lessened.—London Lancet.

Sunday Recreation.

Mrs. Edna Cheney remarks: "It has always been my test for spending Sunday to see how one gets up on Monday morning. If on that morning work seems sweet and you are ready to do it heartily and happily, then you have spent your Sunday to some purpose. I don't care whether it is in church or out, in the fields or in your quiet home with a book in your hand, or playing and frolicking with the children. But however you have spent Sunday the test of it is that the dawn of Monday seems blessed and good and hopeful."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Steam Attachment to Telephone.

Manager Fouse of the Telephone exchange, Ashland, Ky., has devised an ingenious attachment for telephones, to be used in factories and shops where the amount of noise makes it almost impossible to hear the call bell of the instrument. It consists of a steam whistle, which is turned on by means of a lever operated by magnetism. When the instrument is called from the exchange the bell rings as usual, and, by the electrical current passing through a magnet, a weight is released which pulls the lever to the whistle. Once started, the whistle keeps up its shrill note until some one answers the call and turns off the steam, which is done by simply replacing the weight. One of these attachments is being placed at the local steel plant, another at the tannery and several more will probably be installed in sawmills and similar establishments. —Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

An Odd Wager.

A queer wager is the one popularly believed to have been won by Sir Walter Raleigh from Queen Elizabeth, on the debatable question of how much smoke is contained in a pound of tobacco. A pound of the article was weighed, burned and then weighed in ashes, and the question was held to be satisfactorily settled by determining the weight of the smoke as exactly that of the tobacco before being burned, minus the ashes. The fact of the ashes having received an additional weight by combination with the oxygen of the atmosphere was unthought of by Elizabeth and the knight.

The honors which Russia has been paying to the visiting United States man-of-war Marblehead form a gracious international courtesy. It is a good thing, too, to send a war vessel to foreign ports occasionally in order that the people of distant lands may get a glimpse of the American flag. The Russians can form some conception of of the United States navy from their visitor, judging Hercules from his foot. The construction of the Marblehead was authorized in 1888, and she is one of the most modern of our gunboats. Like her sister ships, the Montgomery and Detroit, she is a little larger than the old Yorktown, but of the same general type, except that her guns are protected by armored sponsors. She creditably represents the new navy abroad.

The pathetic appeal of Queen Ranavolo-Manjaka, of Madagascar, to the Christians of the earth to pray for her kingdom and people in their crisis with France cannot but touch Americans deeply. France's course from the beginning has certainly convinced every unprejudiced observer that she is bent upon "appropriating" the Madagascar empire. The conciliatory cession to France of the port of Diego Suarez, instead of mollifying her ambition has only served to whet her greed for territory. When the sorrowful queen nobly exclaims: "We shall fight and die a thousand deaths rather than concede France's conditions; it is better that as a free nation we should disappear or be exterminated than become the servile subjects of France or any foreign power," she voices the sentiment that gave the United States the Fourth of July In the name of humanity and liberty, the Powers of Europe should interfere in the Madagascar tragedy.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

THE EMPRESS FREDERICK AND HER BEAUTIFUL HOME.

The Old Woman—Wedding Customs Reform—A Riddle of Twin Sisters—Miss Emily Faithfull—The Progress of Suffrage—Lady Somerset's Address.

I was absorbed in looking at the gracefully shaped chairs and couches, the lovely carpets, the tapestry on the walls and all the countless objects of interest which filled the spacious apartment, when suddenly, without a moment's warning from either official or attendant, the empress, accompanied by her lady in waiting, approached. Her majesty was attired in a well fitting plain black dress, the material of which I could not quite determine, and a becoming garden hat of the same dark hue. I noticed that save for earrings of smoked pearls she was without any ornament of jewelry, though I subsequently learned that when en grande tenue her display of precious stones is something wonderful. I confess I should hardly have recognized our former princess royal from the portraits of her usually seen in London, for she looked so much younger than they represent her. No sooner did she begin to converse than I was struck by a certain likeness to the Prince of Wales, especially about the eyes, when she smiled. The empress' manner is charming. One instantly feels at ease in her presence, and her keen appreciation and quick understanding of all that she hears are instantly apparent in the varying and sympathetic tones of her pleasant voice.

At the termination of my interview I was permitted to see something of the castle before I left. The finely proportioned dining room particularly impressed me, with its splendid mantelpiece, over which was a bust of the late emperor, and the music gallery at the end of the room. The table happened to be laid ready for the luncheon, and I had time to notice that its decorations—chiefly masses of roses in silver bowls—looked exquisite. Thence I was taken into a large apartment, in which were glass cases all round the walls, filled with every kind of antique object of art in metal, wood, ivory and china, such as one sees at South Kensington.

The great drawing room pleased me immensely—lighted by lofty windows overlooking the terrace. Green tapestry covered the walls. The furniture was superb—chairs, sofas, tables, etc., of, I think, the Louis XV period, being arranged in groups, all in strict harmony with the architecture of the salon, while the fine center carpet of a predominant red color set off the upholstery to perfection. I simply walked through the spacious library, but could have spent a week there in closely examining pictures, medals, coins, rare engravings and her majesty's selected collection of well read books. I was then allowed just to peep into the private rooms up stairs—the guest chambers—where I saw that no two chairs seemed to be exactly the same, either in shape or color. Her imperial majesty's boudoir and bedroom en suite looked south and commanded lovely views of the distant mountains.

In the nursery garden I had just time to glance at the hothouses, where a fine display of begonias and roses delighted me, and a special house where most tempting looking peaches were flourishing.—St. James Budget.

The Old Woman.

We are surprised that a reverend bishop of the Episcopal church, the Rev. Dr. Cleveland Coxe, should speak of "the new woman" as if she were an actual creature of this day, deserving of special discussion, and, according to the bishop, of particular condemnation. Neither in the diocese of this distinguished clergyman, in the western part of New York, nor anywhere else is there such a woman.

Women are now about the same as they have always been. They still continue to be the mothers of the race, and in spite of reports to the contrary the early impressions of goodness derived from them are yet prevalent. The "new woman" of whom this venerable ecclesiastic speaks is a mere creature of his imagination. Undoubtedly at this time of modern progress women ride on bicycles, and perhaps not always gracefully, but the exercise is useful to them. Very likely, they would present a better appearance to the onlooker if they were less regardful of mere deportment, but as to that matter we shall not venture to offer suggestions. We do not mean to imply even any criticism, though possibly we might hint that young women astride of a vehicle like the bicycle, traveling along open country roads, should be appareled in the costume of horsewomen, or in some array constructed according to its general principles, especially the trousers.

Even as it is, we are not disposed to be captious. These young women are better informed than we as to the proper requirements of a feminine garb. Yet it occurs to us that the usual flowing robes, so admirable in public places, might properly assume other fashions than those deemed suitable for them under the usual circumstances.

But the bishop of the western diocese of New York need have no fear of the rising of a new woman. The old woman who stood in the garden of Eden, under the temptation of the serpent, remains now as she has been always in the past, the mainstay of the church and the parent of the mankind for whose salvation the church was established.—New York Sun.

Wedding Customs Reform.

A writer in an English magazine calls attention to "Some Objectionable Wedding Customs," singling out four for special condemnation. The first is throwing the slipper after the carriage of the bride and groom, which is declared to possess neither the virtue of symbolism nor antiquity. It is supposed to have been derived from a German custom of the bride throwing her own shoe back to the assembled guests, but no one can say what that awkward performance signified.

The second practice with which "An Old Lady" finds fault is the scattering of rice, which she declares to be "a silly, unmeaning, disagreeable and dirty practice, less than 50 years old." The argument that uncooked rice contains many microbes and is therefore particularly unsuitable to shower upon a bride and groom ought to have weight. The third protest is against boy pages, and the fourth against the aggravation of the offense by dressing them in theatrical costumes.

As a substitute for these comparatively modern and questionable features of the wedding festivities the suggestion is made that flowers should always be strewn in the path of the bride, and that slips of rosemary should be given to husband and wife as they leave the church. The significance of this old custom is that rosemary was used at funerals as well as at weddings, and the idea of presenting it to the newly married was that they should live together until one should lay rosemary upon the coffin of the other. In some parts of England in the middle ages the bride was crowned with a wreath of wheat. As this grain is everywhere the symbol of prosperity there would seem to be a poetical fitness in such a garland.

A Riddle of Twin Sisters.

Lily and Rose Hohfeld are twins. They were side by side at the head of the graduating class of the girls' high school. Equal in mental power, they are so like in face, feature and person that it keeps their father and their teachers forever guessing which is which. Their teachers long ago gave up the riddle and now address them as "Lily or Rose, whichever you are." Their father even is often puzzled to distinguish the girls one from the other. If he addresses one of them by name, and she declines to answer, he knows he has made a mistake, and the girls sometimes amuse themselves with the puzzle.

The girls were born in Oakland a little over 18 years ago and now live with their parents at 143 Bartlett street. Mrs. Hohfeld, who is a very handsome woman, in speaking of her daughters, said that when they were attending the grammar school one of their teachers sent her a note with the request that she tie their hair with different colored ribbons in order to make their identity a little less perplexing.

Mr. Brooks, principal of the girls' high school, stated that never before in his long experience as a teacher had he met with a case like the Hohfeld sisters. It is most unusual to find twins so mentally and physically equal. As a general rule, one or the other is delicate or disinclined to study. Mr. Brooks said there was only a fraction of 1 per cent difference in their records, and he spoke in most complimentary terms of their deportment as well as their scholarship.—San Francisco Examiner.

Miss Emily Faithfull.

The death of Miss Emily Faithfull is a serious loss to the world at large, as well as to the world of women workers, of which she was so earnest and successful a member. Not the least striking of her characteristics was her versatility. She was philanthropist, journalist, author, lecturer and thinker, and all with equal success. Her especial philanthropic interest was the extension of the field of labor for women. In 1860 she set up a printing establishment, in which all the compositors were women. Three years later she began the publication of a monthly organ called The Victoria Magazine, in which she set forth the claims of women to remunerative employment. This journal enjoyed an 18 years' existence, during which time its columns were chiefly filled with productions from the pen of its founder and editor.

Miss Faithfull's first essay in fiction was a novel entitled "Change Upon Change," which met with immediate favor. She next returned to the lecture field, appearing in the leading literary and philanthropic institutions in England, and later, in 1872, in America. After her third tour in the United States, 1882-3, she published a book entitled "Three Visits to America," which dealt particularly with the condition of woman and woman's work on this side of the Atlantic. Miss Faithfull was a constant contributor to various periodicals. Her likeness shows her to have been not beautiful, but her features possessed the same strong and noble characteristics that marked her soul.—Exchange.

The Progress of Suffrage.

"How little we dreamed," said Henry B. Blackwell, in an address on the progress of suffrage, "when the first suffrage convention was held in New England in 1868 that a quarter of a century would elapse before a single New England state would recognize the political equality of her sons and daughters, and that a majority of all the brave ancestors of the cause would have passed away before this reform would have been accomplished. Since then the colleges, the professions and the industries of New England have been opened to women. In New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and Connecticut we have secured for women the right to vote in school elections. In 1870, when our association made a campaign in Vermont, eloquent speeches were made by Lloyd Garrison, Lucy Stone, Julia Ward Howe and Mary A. Livermore, yet we obtained only two votes in the following constitutional convention.

"Since then we have secured majorities in the popular branches of the legislatures of Vermont, Rhode Island, Maine and Massachusetts. Our ranks have been thinned by death, but we have never had a deserter. Our comrades have faded from sight, but we are here with our children and our children's children, without a wound in our faith, without a break in our hope, and stronger than when we began."

Lady Somerset's Address.

Lady Henry Somerset, in her presidential address at the nineteenth annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance association in London June 11, said: "The enfranchisement of women has now become a part of the solid rock under our feet. There is no speech nor language in which the voice is not heard of this great controversy. Its gains have never been more marked than in the past two years. The women of New Zealand have the full rights of voters, the women in the great state of Colorado have the same, and in both countries it has been exercised by numbers equal in proportion to the number of men who have voted, and with the strong tendency toward home protection and the destruction of that which disintegrates the home that has always been predicted by its advocates.

"The executive committee of the British Women's Temperance association recommends the establishment of a department for the enfranchisement of women, with a superintendent at its head. In earlier years we had not reached this vantage ground. Our progress has been slow, but sure. The women of England will no doubt be enfranchised within the next ten years. Blessed are they who shall have a part in this great triumph of the forces of God in government!"

Her Fishing Feats.

"Miss Fly Rod" is the fetching name by which Miss Cordelia Crosby of Maine is known. She is the pride and boast of the Rangeley lake region, where her fishing feats have won for her her quaint pseudonym. She began life in a quiet enough way as postmistress, but the physicians told her that she would not live long unless she took to the open air. Now there is not a camp in the whole Rangeley district where she, her rod and her gun are not known and welcome. Her sporting attire is modest and sensible, consisting of a loose waist, a plain skirt, which reaches her ankles, a short underskirt and tights. "Miss Fly Rod's" most notable catch was one of 52 fish landed in 44 minutes.

To Hold Her Shirt Studs.

A small leather jewel case, designed for the convenience of the summer girl, is made expressly for holding her cuff buttons, collar and shirt studs, and also her scarfpin. The inside of the cover is arranged by a series of narrow straps to hold the scarfpins in place and is covered on the inside by a piece of fine chamois to prevent the pins from scratching. The box proper is divided into small partitions, chamois lined, for holding the cuff buttons and collar and shirt studs. These cases come in all shades of leather, and many of them have the monogram of the owner in silver on the top. They fasten with a tiny silver padlock and key.

She Wheels and Sells.

A woman drummer for a St. Louis vinegar manufactory is touring the northwest on a bicycle and in stunning Parisian bloomers. She started from St. Louis last January. She sends postal cards ahead of her to the grocers saying she will "wheel into town about next week" and asking them to save their orders for her. She is creating a sensation and selling lots of vinegar.

Knew What She Was About.

The woman who refused to say "obey" at her marriage ceremony, performed by Mayor Strong the other day, was a widow. This fact, says the woman's column in the New York Sun, is significant. It may be taken for granted that at her first marriage ceremony the word "obey" was used. The woman probably knew what she was about.

Mrs. Childs' New Home.

Mrs. George W. Childs, who is the very wealthy widow of the great Philadelphia editor, is building a fine residence of the colonial type in Washington, though with certain Philadelphia modifications, such as the tight, white outside board window blind. The interior is to be finished in the natural woods and furnished most luxuriously.

Changing Heart.

How fast the papers in this state are now turning over and joining the woman suffragists! A short while ago The Freeman was entirely alone in advocating suffrage for women, but it lacks a great deal of being alone today. Thank God!—Sumter (S. C.) Freeman.

Kate Masterson, the writer, says the modern woman knows just how it feels to have her collar button slip down her back and her collar flap up against her ears. And she can't swear—yet.

Over 250 American women are doing missionary work in Japan. They are greatly loved and admired by the people and lead very happy and joyous lives.

Miss Gail Laughlin condensed a world of meaning into the salient sentence: Suffrage means influence plus vote—not vote minus influence.

What a Canton Mother Says.

"I have raised a family of six children and have tried all the cures for colic from paregoric to catnip tea, and never found anything so valuable as Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. It expels wind from the stomach at once and gives such a quiet and refreshing sleep. I would not be without Dr. Hand's Colic Cure or Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion for four times the cost. Mothers, give them a trial."—Mrs. H. A. Brown, 237 south Cherry St., Canton, O. Sold at all drug stores, 25c.

That Tired Feeling

Is a common complaint and it is a dangerous symptom. It means that the system is debilitated because of impure blood, and in this condition it is especially liable to attacks of disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the remedy for this condition, and also for that weakness which prevails at the change of season, climate or life.

Hood's Pills act easily, yet promptly and efficiently, on the bowels and liver. 25c.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

THE ENSILAGE CROP.

How to Handle the Crop—Distributing Device—The Best Covering.

For success it is necessary to have quite a good crop, preferably corn cut at the right time, and a tight silo. When practicable have the ensilage grown as near the silo as possible, so as to reduce the hauling to a minimum. We will suppose that the crop is grown on land within 50 rods of the silo, and that the corn has reached the stage when the husks begin to turn yellow and the grain is dented, while most of the leaves are yet green and juicy. When this stage is reached, the crop should be cut. The cutting may be done by hand, but it is slow, laborious and costly. There are a multitude of corn cutters on the market, all of which are more or less serviceable. Of a number that have been tried at the Kansas station nothing better has been found than a sled cutter with two knives hinged, one to each side of the sled, so as to cut two rows at a time. This machine is pulled by one horse. Two stout boys or young men stand upon the sled, each facing a row of corn, which, as the horse moves forward, is cut off and gathered into the arms of the operators, who drop it in bunches behind them. The reins can hang within easy reach upon an upright forked stick in front of the sled, but the horse will soon learn to start and stop without guidance from the reins. In a fair crop two hands on this cutter can easily keep ahead of three wagons hauling it to the silo and help load at intervals.

The next step is the loading. For this purpose the wagons should be provided with low, broad racks, on which the corn is piled crossways. Two men can hand the bunches left by the cutter up to the driver on the rack about as fast as he can pile them. The number of teams engaged in hauling should be adjusted to the distance and the capacity of the ensilage cutter. For the distance named and with a small machine it takes two teams and three wagons to keep things running smoothly. One wagon is left at the cutter to be unloaded, the team being at once hitched to the wagon just emptied and goes afield again, while the third wagon will have finished loading by the time the team returns to the field.

At the cutter it takes one man to unload and one man to feed. The man who unloads drops it handy for the feeder upon the table set against the cutter. Reference is here made to a small machine such as average farmers require. Such a cutter, with average steady running, can cut about two tons of green corn an hour. It is provided with an elevator attachment, which lifts the cut material over the silo walls. It may be run by steam, electricity or horsepower. The whole force necessary, then, is two men to cut, two to load, two to drive, one to unload and one to feed. If green and juicy, the weight of the ensilage is so very great that it will firm itself about as well without tramping, but some device is necessary to distribute it well in the silo. A sack filled with chaff, straw or a similar light bulky material should be hung so that the stream of silage from the elevator is discharged upon it. This will scatter it to the sides of the silo instead of dumping it in a heap in the middle. It is not necessary to salt the silage.

Lastly, it is poor economy to use a silo that is not tight. Wherever the air gains access to the walls the silage will spoil. When the silo is full, a layer of green grass is the best covering, and to compact this layer it is well to put a few loads of earth on top. This is the plan that has been adopted with success at the Kansas station and reported to The Prairie Farmer. As it is of general interest it is here reproduced for the benefit of readers in many sections of the country.

National Irrigation Congress.

The national irrigation congress, which is to meet at Albuquerque, N. M., beginning Sept. 16, for a four days' session, promises to be full of interest and instruction. There will be a review of the progress of irrigation during the years 1894 and 1895, with lectures by Judge J. S. Emery of Kansas, Hon. Clark E. Carr of Denmark, ex-Governor L. A. Sheldon of Los Angeles, E. R. Moses of Kansas, Thomas Knight of Missouri, Judge E. T. Kinney of Utah and others. Lute Wilcox, editor of the Denver Field and Farm, is on the programme for the second day for a talk on "Practical Methods of Irrigation," with charts. John A. Frost will speak on "Colonization of Arid Lands." On the third day Captain W. A. Glassford, United States army, will present a paper on "Climatology of the Arid Region." This will be followed by a discussion on the scientific aspects of irrigation. The foregoing are a few of the many good things on the programme for this important occasion.

Squash Bugs.

A correspondent of Rural New Yorker says: "We took a lot of shingles and pressed these down on their sides in the hills at a sharp angle, so that the upper edge of each was about a couple of inches above the surface of the ground. These made a warm place to retreat to when night came, and on going the rounds in the early morning lots of bugs were found on the under side, when by bringing two pieces together they are easily killed. In about ten days the bugs were nearly exterminated. Much of the injury by the bugs is done when the vines have little more than broken ground by their sucking the juice from the upright stem. If the squash vines have been well fed with food rich in nitrogen, these last attacks will do but little harm."

Sentenced to Siberia.

A nobleman once entered into a conspiracy against the Russian emperor and was sentenced to Siberia. His eyes were bandaged, and he was put into a dark carriage, and for seven days and nights they traveled on and on, only stopping to take food. At last he felt they must have reached Siberia, and in the utmost anguish he perceived that the carriage had stopped, and the bandage was taken off his eyes, and—he was in his own home! He had been driven round and round St. Petersburg the whole time, but the fright cured him.—Young Ladies' Journal.

THE TOYS.

My little son, who looked from thoughtful eyes
And moved and spoke in quiet grown up wise,
Having my law the seventh time disobeyed,
I struck him and dismissed
With hard words and unkissed,
His mother, who was patient, being dead.
Then, fearing lest his grief should hinder sleep,
I visited his bed,
But found him slumbering deep,
With darkened eyelids and their lashes yet
From his late sobbing wet.
And I, with moan,
Kissing away his tears, left others of my own,
For on a table drawn beside his head
He had put, within his reach,
A box of counters and a red vein'd stone,
A piece of glass abraded by the beach
And six or seven shells,
A bottle with bluebells
And two French copper coins, rang'd there with careful art
To comfort his sad heart.
So when that night I prayed
To God and wept and said:
"Ah, when at last we lie with tranced breath,
Not vexing thee in death,
And thou rememberest of what toys
We make our joys,
How weakly understood
Thy great commanded good,
Then, fatherly not less
Than I whom thou hast molded from the clay,
Thou'lt leave thy wrath and say,
'I will be sorry for their childishness.'"

HE WAS VERY HUNGRY.

How a Texan Got a Good Meal at a General's Expense.

Mr. Goss, in his "Recollections of a Private," quotes the remarks of a Confederate about two famous leaders under whom he had fought. This man said of Stonewall Jackson, "If you uns had some good general like him, I reckon you uns could lick we uns." When asked whether he had ever seen General Lee, he replied: "Yes; I was a sort of orderly for Uncle Robert for awhile. He's a mighty calmlike man when a fight is going on."

This story is told of General John B. Magruder:

"Our General Magruder thinks a powerful heap of what he eats and wears. He allers has a right smart of truck.

"There was a Texas feller one time who had straggled from his brigade, and he were a pert one, he were, stranger. He were hungry enough to eat a general, buttons and all—that Texas feller were. He saw Magruder's table all spread, with a heap of good fixin's on it, and I'll be hanged if he didn't walk in, pert as you please, grabbed a knife and fork and opened fire all along the line on them fixin's.

"Magruder heard something in his tent and hurried in and asked that Texas chap what brought him thar. The Texan 'lowed he were hungry. Then the general, stiff and grandlike, said, 'Do you know, sir, at whose table you are eatin?'

"The Texas chap, he kept drivin in the pickets on them chick'ns, and he said to the gen'ral, said he, 'No, old hoss, and I ain't no ways partic'lar, neither, since I've come solderin.'"

"What did Magruder do?" asked a Yankee listener.

"Do? Why, he saw them chicken fixin's were spiled, and he jest put his arm under his coattail, pulled his hat over his eyes and walked out. And that Texas hoss didn't leave anything on that thar table 'cept the plates—not even his compliments.

"Who were he? Well, no matter. He hadn't no manners, he hadn't. He were powerful hungry, stranger, that chap were."

A Fortunate Accident.

"I am lost!" the prima donna sobbed. "My years of hard study have gone for nothing."

"Alas, what is the matter?" asked her maid.

"My prospects are ruined, all through a wretched accident. Just as I was approaching the end of my aria a horrid bug flew on the stage and lit on my neck."

"And you screamed?"

"I did. What else could I do? It was my last scene and I had no chance to redeem myself."

The bell sounded and the maid announced a man from the theater.

"Show him in," said the prima donna. "I may as well meet my fate at once. It is my dismissal from the company."

"Scuse me, ma'am, fur disturbin you," said the visitor, "but de manager wants to know did you run away from your curtain recall 'cause you was took sick."

"No, ... perfectly well."

"All right. That'll ease his mind. He says that screech you let out at the wind up was the finest high C he's heard in years and you've got the town crazy over you."—Washington Star.

Modesty.

The confidence of musicians in their own accomplishments is often a matter of merriment to other people. A certain pianist had performed several sonatas, to the not too great delight of a private company, when the hostess thought proper to compliment him moderately.

"Your playing is remarkably fine, Mr. Keys," she said.

The pianist waved his hand deprecatingly.

"Really, madam," he said, "the credit does not belong to me, if I am endowed with genius by a higher power!"—Youth's Companion.

Mrs. Rhodie Noab, o this place, was taken in the night with cramping pains and the next day diarrhoea set in. She took half a bottle of blackberry cordial but got no relief. She then sent to me to see if I had anything that would help her. I sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and the first dose relieved her. Another of our neighbors had been sick for about a week and had tried different remedies for diarrhoea but kept getting worse. I sent him this same remedy. Only four doses of it were required to cure him. He says he owes his recovery to this wonderful remedy.—Mrs. Mary Sidley, Sidney, Mich. For sale by Melville Bros., next to P. O.; C. W. Heister, 58 Public Square.

E. A. U. Officers.

The following officers of Golden Rule Union E. A. U. have been elected for the ensuing six months: Mrs. M. E. Crippen, advocate; H. Crum, president; Mrs. Anna Henderson, vice president: Rosa Killian, secretary; E. D. Randall, accountant; J T. Black, treasurer; Mrs. C. A. Lipfert, sentinel; A. Mullen, watchman; Mrs Amanda Killian, chaplain; Mrs. J. L. Andrews, auxiliary; Miss Cloe Levines, warden; S. H. Treat, trustee.

The officers will be installed next Friday evening, and all members are expected to be in attendance.

Last summer one of our grand children was sick with a severe bowel trouble. Our doctor's remedies had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief. We regard it as the best medicine ever put on the market for bowel complaints.—Mrs. E. G. Gregory, Frederickstown, Mo. This certainly is the best medicine ever put on the market for dysentery, summer complaint, colic and cholera infantum in children. It never fails to give prompt relief when used in reasonable time and the plain printed directions are followed. Many mothers have expressed their sincere gratitude for the cures it has effected. For sale by Melville Bros, next to P. O; C. W. Heister, 58 Public Square.

SEVERED AN ARTERY.

Little Son of Ex-Probate Judge Lindeman Injured.

At the home of John F. Lindeman, on east Third street, last evening, an accident happened which caused considerable loss of blood to Clarence, the nine-year-old son of Mr. Lindeman. Several joints of stove pipe were placed overhead in the laundry, and the children had placed a swing in the building. The jar loosened the pipe, and a piece some six feet long slid down, the sharp edge striking the little fellow on the instep of the right foot. An artery and several small blood vessels were severed The wound bled profusely until Dr. Harrison was summoned, who dressed the foot and put him to bed, where he is now resting easy. In its downward course the pipe also struck little Dick Baxter, son of Mayor Baxter, on the side of his head, causing a lump to appear.—Delphos Herald.

WANTED AT CELINA.

Lima Police Capture Men Wanted There.

Saturday night the police received a telegram from Celina describing three men wanted there upon a charge of grand larceny. The telegram stated the men were on an east-bound L. E. & W. train, and when it arrived here the police were in the yards.

There were four men in the crowd and one escaped, but the other three were captured and taken to the police station, where they gave their names as Ebrehod, Bradley and Thompson. Sheriff Heffner, of Celina, was telegraphed and he came to this city and returned with the prisoners yesterday, accompanied by Lieut. Wingate.

In your blood is the cause of that tired and languid feeling. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes rich, red blood and gives renewed vigor.

For the Heathen.

Mother—Where did you get that sixpence from, Fritz?

Fritz—You gave it to me yesterday for the heathen, you know.

Mother—But why did you not give it to the teacher?

Fritz—Because teacher said I was a regular heathen.—Die Ostschweiz.

Had Bitten Herself.

About a quarter of a century ago Beranger's "Grisette" was performed at one of the theatres. The part of Lisette was allotted to Virginie Dejazet. This popular actress, then advanced in years, had lost all her teeth, and, to do justice to her new role, she had ordered a fresh set. As the teeth felt uncomfortable, she took them out when the play was over and put them in her pocket. When in the green room she incautiously sat down and immediately jumped up with a scream.

"What is the matter?" inquired our jolly old friend, Adolphe Dennery.

"Nothing," said Mlle. Dejazet. "I have only bitten myself."—Revue Theatrale.

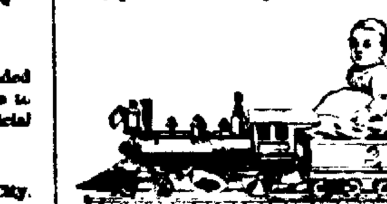
FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

YOUNGEST ENGINEER.

Rex Woodie Runs a Locomotive, Though He Is Not Quite a Year Old.

Once again Kansas comes to the front, this time with the youngest engineer on earth. It is true his run is not a long one, the inter-state commission has no terrors for the road over which he is the autocrat of the throttle and the company for which he labors permits his sweet will to be law. Rex Woodie is his name, and in a few weeks he will be a year old. His proud father is an electrical and mechanical expert and before the World's fair opened he built a locomotive, perfect in all parts, which is a trifle over 4 feet long. Then he constructed an electric motor and furnished power for the engine. When Rex came into the world, his fond mamma put him into the tender one day, and the youngster plainly showed that never before in his life had he had so much fun. This furnished his pater with an idea. In a few days 20 feet of track were constructed, a switch was put into the cab, and baby was made acquainted with its use. Now he takes daily rides, and so far has not met with an accident. He is the pride of Fort Scott, and should a baby show be started in that bustling Sunflower city it is not believed another parent will have the temerity to enter his pet against Rex. He rules the town.—Chicago Tribune.



Eying the Bird.

The common game of pinning, while blindfolded, a tail on a picture of a donkey is assumed to be a modern invention, and is, in fact, new to most people. It is, however, only a modification of an older game, very common on shipboard, called "eying the bird."

This is played thus: On the deck of a ship is chalked a picture which represents a bird. Not infrequently the contemplation of the picture alone is well worth participation in the game, on account of its extraordinary want of resemblance to a bird.

This bird is left without an eye. One player is then blindfolded and given a piece of chalk. He is turned around once, a few yards away from the picture, and then told to make a circular mark as near as possible to the place where the bird's eye ought to be.

The player's peregrinations afford much amusement to the others present. Often he starts in quite the wrong direction, but may be warned by the others' laughter and reverse his course.

Sometimes he makes straight for the bird's head, but is diverted from his course by a lurch of the ship. After he has made his mark the bandage is removed and he is permitted to see how many yards away from the bird he has placed the eye.

Then another player is blindfolded, and the game proceeds until each has had his turn. There is a prize for the player who has come nearest to the eye—and in rare cases it has been known to be correctly placed—and a "booby prize" for the one who has marked farthest away.

This game can be played on any large floor space, but is lent additional interest by the rolling movement of a ship.—Youth's Companion.

Gorgeous Soap Bubbles.

Make a fluid in this way: Get a cake of palm oil soap, shave its parings as thin as possible and drop in a big bottle filled with distilled water. Shake the mixture very vigorously, then filter through gray filtering paper and mix the remaining fluid with one-third of its bulk of pure glycerin. Before using shake well. Get a small glass funnel about 2 inches in diameter, connect it with a tube of india rubber, and you can blow bubbles with this apparatus that will surpass the rainbow itself in brilliancy and beauty. Yes; there is a lot of trouble in getting your scientific pipe and liquid ready, but think of the sport in the end. Just imagine a bubble 12 inches across! You can blow them in this way by putting them upon a big iron ring (very carefully, of course), while the metal is wet with the prepared solution. Get a ring that is quite rusty. That assures a good result. A string of bubbles 2 or 3 inches in diameter can be kept intact for 10 or 12 hours.

Noses Out of Joint.

You needn't cry and look so sad.
I love you, pussy, dear, the same—
I truly do—as I loved you
Before this cunning kitty came.
But things are changed a little now,
You know, and 'cause he is so small
I've got to 'tend the most to him.
Your nose is out of joint, that's all.
Don't you remember that cold day
They left me hours and hours in bed?
And when nurse came for me at last,

"Your nose is out of joint," she said—
"A baby's come to live with us."
Well, then, that's what's the matter now.
You might have known how it would be.
Oh, dear, my head! Please don't meow,
Or I must send you from the room.
Nice little girls don't make a noise
When their mammas give almost all
Their kisses to small red faced boys.
I tell you, puss, you are too big
To sit with kit upon my knee,
And it's no worse for you to have
Your nose put out of joint than me.
—Margaret Eytinge.

A WOMAN'S TACT.

It Must Be Carefully Used In Getting a House Party Together.

Utmost tact is needed to bring the right kind of people together in a house party. They must either be mutual friends or strangers that are sure of being congenial—not the same kind of people certainly. Every one would be dreadfully bored. But well selected complements will surely bring out the best in every one.

There is no need of having an equal number of men and women. That smacks too much of intentional pairing off. There should be a few young people for gayety, a number of bright men and women for spice, and a sympathetic soul, with young blood in her veins yet, to help the hostess in her wide reaching duties of chaperon.

Invitations should be sent out five or six weeks in advance, the length of the stay fixed at a week or at ten days, the day of arrival and departure stated definitely. With the invitation one sends a time table, with the most convenient train for arriving marked.

The hostess writes a cordial note to the women, including their husbands, to a father and daughter, to a brother and sister, as well as to a woman who is to come alone. The host writes to invite the single men. Engraved cards and the third person are never used. Invitations to "come on and see us any time," or to "run down for a few days," are simply kindly ways of expressing friendship and the pleasure of a visit, would one ever be arranged. If more than this is meant, a note giving a definite time will be forthcoming.

An invitation to a house party should be answered within two or three days, as the hostess sends out all her notes at the same time and is of course anxious to fill any gaps before people have made summer plans. If a guest can come for only a part of the ten days, she allows the hostess to say she will be glad to have her that short time, or to postpone the visit to a week or two later, so that that particular party may not be broken up in the middle.

It is now not considered a slight, however. On the contrary, it is a compliment to ask a friend to fill a gap in a party or even at a dinner table at the eleventh hour. On the other side, it is a charmingly given help at a critical moment, which a hostess never forgets. So, then, a guest may come for the first five days and another for the last if so the hostess wills it.

The invitations include a list of the people who are invited and a hint at the nature of the party, so that a guest may know what clothes to bring, and whether golf or bathing suits or riding habits or all will be in demand.

One should not refuse an invitation to a house party simply because he feels that he cannot return the hospitality on a like extensive scale. A host does not expect to be paid in kind. He invites a man because of his brains, his clever tongue or his usefulness. He helps make the party a success, and a dinner the next winter settles the affair, as far as duty is concerned.—Boston Herald.

The Heroine of Manipur.

Mrs. F. St. Clair Grimwood, the heroine of the siege of Manipur, has just married Mr. Miller, a paper manufacturer. Her husband was the resident in 1891, when the residency and its garrison of 450 men were attacked by 8,000 natives. After her husband was killed Mrs. Grimwood led the defense, cheering the men and herself taking part in the fighting. When the place became untenable, she and the remnant of the garrison fled for ten days through the jungle, exposed to a continuous fire from their pursuers. Mrs. Grimwood shared all the men's privations, kept up every one's courage and devoted herself to the sick when there was no fighting to be done. When their ammunition was almost gone, and Mrs. Grimwood had arranged with the colonel in command to save one bullet for her rather than let her fall into the hands of the enemy a body of troops dispatched to the rescue appeared in sight and carried Mrs. Grimwood and the few survivors in triumph to the nearest city. Queen Victoria gave Mrs. Grimwood the Victoria wreath, a grant of £1,000 and an annuity of £140 a year.

An Awful

"Speaking of fishing experiences," said the man in the negligee shirt, "I shall never forget the day when Bob White and I—you know Bob?—were trying our luck on Lake Squam. We had fished for an hour or more and had caught only a few little fellows, when suddenly I had an awful bite"—

"And then you pulled in your line, hand over hand, only to lose a ten pound pickerel just as you were about to land him," interrupted the fat man sitting on the flour barrel.

"I had an awful bite," the fisherman resumed, without noticing his interrupter, "and I mashed the fellow as flat as a doormat. It was the biggest mosquito I ever encountered."—Boston Transcript.

Brookline's Suffragists.

In Brookline, Mass., the suffrage sentiment, stimulated by the winter debates of the Discussion club and certain brilliant parlor meetings as well, blossoms out bravely in the newly organized "Equal Suffrage Association of Brookline," which was formed, with much enthusiasm, at the house of Mrs. Page, on Hill street, June 10. It starts with a membership of 75 and a fine strong corps of officers, able and interested. The officers are as follows: President, Mrs. Schlesinger; vice presidents, Mrs. Graul, Mrs. Carpenter, Mrs. Channing; recording secretary, Mrs. Starr; corresponding secretary, Mrs. North; treasurer, Mrs. Bearse; executive committee, Mrs. Crane, Mrs. Briggs, Mrs. Benedict, Miss Carpenter, Mrs. Page.

The Railroad Man, The Clergyman, The Business Man, and all other men who have to look neat while at work, should know about "CELLULOID" COLLARS AND CUFFS. They look exactly like linen, wear well and being waterproof do not wilt down with heat and moisture. They do not soil easily and can be cleaned in a moment by simply wiping off with a wet sponge or cloth. Do not confuse these in your mind with composition goods. Every piece of the genuine is stamped like this:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Ask for these and refuse anything else if you wish satisfaction. Remember that goods so marked are the only waterproof goods made by coating a linen collar with waterproof "Celluloid," thus giving strength and durability. If your dealer should not have the "Celluloid" send amount direct to us and we will mail you sample post-paid. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs, 50c. pair. State size and whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted.

THE BARBER'S REVENGE.

A Tale of a Talkative Tonsorial Artist and His Gruff Customer.

As he threw himself back into the embrace of the cushioned chair of a Union square barber shop he scowled fiercely at the barber and buried his face in the newspaper. But the barber didn't mind the ugly opening. He leaned over, garroted the tonsorial patient with a towel and painted his face with lather. When he had flipflapped a razor once or twice along the strop he began mildly:

"Nice day, sir."

"Oh, is it?" answered the other.

The barber looked startled, but he tried again.

"Paper says we're going to have nice weather now."

"Thanks," was the answer, "I know how to read myself."

At this rebuff the barber kept silence. But he shaved against the grain, tweaked the other's nose and daubed soap into the corner of his mouth. The gruff man swore softly, the barber smiled, and as a final act of violence grabbed the other by the top of the scalp and twisted his head until the cervical vertebrae creaked again.

"Say," cried the gruff man, "my head ain't no roulette wheel."

But still the barber shaved on in silence. He shaved and shaved, scraping the skin so close that it showed ragged under the blade. Then, leaning over, he grabbed a handful of raw and tender skin and rolled it between his fingers until the other groaned aloud. As the tear drops stole down the scarified face the barber administered the final taunt:

"Do you shave yourself, sir?"

"No," roared the gruff man, leaping up in the chair, "I shave my grandmother and sister's nieces."

Then he buried his face in the paper and the barber smiled and smiled and smiled, while he rubbed alum into the sore spots on the victim's chin.—New York World.

School Methods Abroad.

As a rule natural history and geography are more delightfully taught in Prussia than here. We gladly use its maps, colored pictures and natural collections. School hygiene in Switzerland is enforced in wonderful ways. Skating vacations on well prepared icefields are prescribed, and there are vacation colonies and "milk cures" for the sickly. From Vienna comes the demand for more playgrounds under the care of experienced teachers maintained by the city and regularly attended.—Last Report of United States Commissioner of Education W. Harris.

A CHEERFUL GIVER.

NOVELIST HOWELLS DESCRIBES HIS TRIBULATIONS

A Maimed Beggar, a Solitary Half Dollar and the Contest Between Two Consciences Unsettled. A Usually Calm Mind, but a Compromise Was Arranged.

Mr W. D. Howells has written for The Century two papers entitled "Tribulations of a Cheerful Giver," giving ... nity. The following is taken from the first paper:

Some months ago, as I was passing through a down town street on my way to the elevated station, I saw a man sitting on the steps of a house. He seemed to be resting his elbows on his knees and holding out both his hands. As I came nearer I perceived that he had no hands, but only stumps, where the fingers had been cut off close to the palms, and that it was these stumps he was holding out in the mute appeal which was his form of begging. Otherwise he did not ask charity. When I approached him he did not look up, and when I stopped in front of him he did not speak. I thought this rather fine in its way; except for his mutilation, which the man really could not help, there was nothing to offend the taste, and his immobile silence was certainly impressive.

I decided at once to give him something, for when I am in the presence of want or even the appearance of want, there is something that says to me, "Give to him that asketh," and I have to give or else go away with a bad conscience—a thing I hate. Of course I do not give much, for I wish to be a good citizen as well as a good Christian, and as soon as I obey that voice which I cannot disobey I hear another voice reproaching me for encouraging street beggary. I have been taught that street beggary is wrong, and when I have to unbutton two coats and go through three or four pockets before I can reach the small coin I mean to give in compliance with that imperative voice, I certainly feel it to be wrong. So I compromise, and I am never able to make sure that either of those voices is satisfied with me. I am not even satisfied with myself, but I am better satisfied than if I gave nothing. That was the selfish reason I now had for deciding to yield to my better nature and to obey the voice which bade me "Give to him that asketh," for, as I said, I hate a bad conscience, and of two bad consciences I always choose the least, which, in a case like this, is the one that incensed political economy gives me.

I put my hand into my hip pocket, where I keep my silver, and found nothing there but half a dollar. This at once changed the whole current of my feelings, and it was not chill penury that repressed my noble rage, but chill affluence. It was manifestly wrong to give half a dollar to a man who had no hands or to any sort of beggar. I was willing to commit a small act of incivism, but I had not the courage to flout political economy to the extent of 50 cents, and I felt that when I was bidden "Give to him that asketh" I was never meant to give so much as a half dollar, but a cent, or a half dime, or at the most a quarter. I wished I had a quarter. I would gladly have given a quarter, but there was nothing in my pocket but that fatal, that inexorably indivisible half dollar, the continent of two quarters, but not practically a quarter. I would have asked anybody in sight to change it for me, but there was no one passing; it was a quiet street of brownstone dwellings, and not a thronged thoroughfare at any time. At that hour of the late afternoon it was deserted, except for the beggar and myself, and I am not sure that he had any business to be sitting there on the steps of another man's house, or that I had the right to encourage his invasion by giving him anything. For a moment I did not know quite what to do. To be sure, I was not bound to the man in any way. He had not asked me for charity, and I had barely paused before him. I could go on and ignore the incident. I thought of doing this, but then I thought of the bad conscience I should be certain to have, and I could not go on. I glanced across the street, and near the corner I saw a decent looking restaurant, and "Wait a minute," I said to the man, as if he were likely to go away, and I ran across to get my half dollar changed at the restaurant.

I was now quite resolved to give him a quarter, and be done with it; the thing was getting to be a bore. But when I entered the restaurant I saw no one there but a young man quite at the end of a long room, and when he had come all the way forward to find what I wanted I was ashamed to ask him to change my half dollar, and I pretended that I wanted a package of Sweet Caporal cigarettes, which I did not want, and which it was a pure waste for me to buy, since I do not smoke, though doubtless it was better to buy them and encourage commerce than to give the half dollar and encourage beggary. At any rate, I instinctively felt that I had political economy on my side in the transaction, and I made haste to go back to the man on the steps and secure myself with Christian charity too. On the way over to him, however, I decided that I would not give him a quarter, and I ended by posing 15 cents on one of his outstretched stumps.

In the Right Place.

Rubberneck Bill stood looking down at the inanimate form of his thirty-seventh.

"For a greaser," said Bill, "he put up a purty game fight."

"That's what," assented Soapless Jones. "Pity he had to go. Fer, if he was a greaser, his heart came mighty near being in the right place."

"It is lucky for me that it wuz. S'posen when I plugged him thar it had been on the other side."—Cincinnati Tribune.

Indorsed by Editors.

At a recent meeting of the Political Equality club of Dunkirk, N. Y., letters were read from editors heartily indorsing woman suffrage and offering their columns for its promulgation. One editor said he believed the foundation of government was the home, and as women especially represent the home they should by all means have a voice in government. Another editor said he would gladly lend his columns to show women their duty in this direction, believing that it was their duty to have a voice and share the responsibilities of government.

Gentlemen: I have used tobacco for over twenty-five years, chewing and smoking every day from 7 a. m. to 9 p. m., stopping only for meals.
On Monday, February 4, I called at your office in Springfield, and bought a bottle of the CURE which I used as directed and on the tenth day the desire for tobacco had left me and it has not returned. I did not lose a meal while taking the CURE. My appetite has improved and I consider NARCOTI CURE a grand thing.

EPWORTH CHURCH

Dedicated Yesterday with Appropriate Services

The Entire Debt Lifted and the Church Starts Out on a Solid Foundation.

Epworth M. E. church was dedicated yesterday, and to its members and those of Grace and Trinity who have worked zealously in its behalf, the day was one of religious enjoyment. During the three services of the day the entire indebtedness was provided for.

The morning and afternoon meetings were held in a grove—God's first temple—east of the church building. Rev. Baumgardner conducted the class meeting at 9:30. At 10:30 the congregation listened to an impressive and deeply spiritual sermon by Rev. Dr. Moore, editor of the Christian Advocate, Cincinnati. He is an eloquent divine, and won a place in the heart of Lima Methodism by his zealous work, whole-hearted nature and entire consecration to the work of the master.

In the afternoon brief but pointed addresses were made by Revs. Robinson, Baumgardner, Olive, Bethards, and Presiding Elder Fitzwater, of Van Wert.

The evening service was held in the new church, at which time the structure was dedicated to God. Rev. Cook, of St. John, was present also in the evening service.

Stirring and inspiring music was furnished throughout the day by a choir from the three churches, under the leadership of Rev. E. T. Bowdle.

The new enterprise has a fair-sized membership and wide-awake pastor, and is certainly destined to do a great work in this newly-opened field of labor.

A SCORCHER

Was the Farewell Run Given by the Lima Cycling Club.

The farewell run to Jas. Barhydt, late captain of the Lima Cycling club, was made to Delphos and return yesterday morning and was one of the fastest and most enjoyable spins of the seasons. About fifteen riders started at 8:45 o'clock. The pace was made by Keeting and Heffner on a tandem, and the distance of nineteen miles, the route taken to Delphos, was ridden in sixty minutes by all except a few riders. The cyclists started on the return trip at 11:02 o'clock and made the distance in fifty-five minutes, the pace being made by the tandem and Barhydt alternately. After the stragglers came in the entire party rode to Capt. Barhydt's residence, on west Spring street, where a picture of the crowd was taken. Mr. Barhydt left for Rochester last night. His family, however, will remain in this city until September.

Coffee Situation.

Reports from the coffee plantations are to the effect that coffees are plentiful but the quality is remarkably poor. We have to-day a visible supply for the United States of nearly six thousand bags, about three thousand more bags than we had at this time last year, and strange to say we never had as poor coffees in America as now. This is why package coffees are of late so poor. We are now making a special effort to please our customers with the finest grades obtainable. We are in position to get the best, and roasting all our own coffees, we are sure to give you as good values as are found anywhere. LIMA TEA CO.

WATERLOO

Is Again Met by the Lima Base Ball Club

Findlay Defeated the Home Club Yesterday Afternoon by a Score of Eight to Four.

Lima at home once again, and met Findlay at Faurot's park yesterday with the usual luck the team has when they go against that club. The trouble with the Limas is that they do not play together. Not once this season has the team had all her positions filled—there was always some new men coming—many of whom never get here. Some jumped their contracts, others received their advance money and never showed up. Altogether the team has played to hard luck. The positions are now all strong with the exception of first base.

Following is the score by innings of yesterday's Waterloo:

Lima	0	0	0	0	1	3	0	0	0—4
Findlay	2	1	1	0	0	1	3	0	*—8

Time—2 hours. Umpires—Doty and Bridges. Hits—Lima 7, Findlay 9. Two-base hits—Cook, Ireland 2, Watson, Pastorius. Three-base hits—Lantz and Pastorius. Errors—Lima 3, Findlay 3. Base on balls—Off Pastorius 2, off Lantz 1. Stolen bases—Lima 4, Findlay 3. Struck out—By Lentz 3, by Pastorius 1.

NOTES.

The Limas were completely outplayed and supported Lentz very poorly.

Umpire Derby is with Findlay again and held down first for that team yesterday.

Lima is still the tail-ender in the race, being over two hundred points below the next lowest club.

The umpire system is very rank. If there is a league there should be an umpire here at every game.

Findlayplays here again to day and Wednesday. The batteries will be Faurot and Watson, Reidy and Gans.

Catcher Watson made a good showing yesterday. He was good behind the bat and at the bat. Schaub, the new third baseman, played the bag better than any man Lima has had here this year.

The Little Potatoes and Hard to Peel club played the East Enders this morning, and won, the score being 16 to 11 in favor of the Little Potatoes. Dave Bruno did some great work in the box, striking out 10 or 12 men. Mike Keller pitched for the East Enders, but received no support.

JOHN RICE

Arrested Upon a Charge of Assault With Intent to Kill.

John Rice, the shoemaker, was arrested about 11:30 o'clock to-day upon a charge of assault with intent to kill.

The affidavit in which Rice is so charged was signed before Mayor Smiley about 10:30 o'clock this morning by a young woman named Evans, who has been staying at Rice's house on the Spencerville road for the past two or three months. She claims that Rice came home Saturday under the influence of liquor and abused her first by calling her vile names, finally striking her and threatening to kill her. She sustained a black eye as proof of the assault.

Rice tells a different story, claiming the young woman did not behave properly and he put her out of the house. He learned that he was wanted by the Chief of Police and went to the police station, where he was locked up. He later gave $200 bail.

AMONG THE RAILROADS.

Conductor Gibney, of the C. & E., is running passenger train and Conductor Johnston is running the west local.

The Erie has published a bulletin relative to carrying attendants with stock and fruit. An attendant will be carried with all perishable fruit, where a stove has to be cared for, or an attendant with each consignment of stock amounting to a car load or more.

The Big Four will soon establish a new system of handling bad order cars. Instead of chalking cars that are in a defective condition, it is the purpose to have the exact condition placed on bad order cards tacked to the cars. From these the switchmen and shopmen can tell exactly what to do with the cars. The class of repairs to be made, light or heavy, are marked and much delay in car movement thus saved.

AUTOMATIC COUPLERS

Besides the extra cost of the automatic couplers and of keeping them in repair, there is a material difference in the power required to pull a train of the old-style link and pin coupler and those of a later invention. A link and pin coupler gives about a six inch slack to a car. In moving a long train this gives an engine quite a start, and has helped more than one engine up a steep grade with a heavy train. Automatic couplers give a train the little slack which is in the box, and with some rigging there is no slack even there. This makes it possible for an engine to move a train only on a dead pull. On roads where automatic couplers are used extensively the number of automatic couplers in a train is taken into consideration in deciding how many cars to put in it.

C. H. & D. CONSOLIDATION.

At the annual meeting of the C., H. & D. stockholders this afternoon, in Cincinnati, the consolidation of the C., H. & D., the C., D. & I. and the C., D. & D. railroads will be voted upon in ratification of a joint agreement by the directors of these companies. The authorized stock of the consolidated company will be $16,000,000, of which $8,000,000 will be five per cent. non-cumulative preferred and $8,000,000 common. In the payment of dividends the preferred will be first entitled to five per cent and then the common will be entitled to five per cent, and any excess will be distributed equally to both classes. The present four per cent. preferred stock of the C., H. & D. may be changed into the new five per cent preferred, share for share, or if the holders elect, it may remain as it now is, a four per cent. first preferred. Each share of the present common stock of the C., H. & D. will be entitled to receive 1 55-100 shares of new preferred and two shares of new common. The outstanding common stocks of the C., D. & I. and C., D. & C. will be interchangeable into new preferred stock on the basis one share of new preferred for four shares of such outstanding common stocks. The authorized capital stock of the consolidating companies is $23,000,000, of which $14,742,100 has been issued.

A NEW RAILROAD TIE

Schuyler Hazzard, civil engineer, in the employ of the Big Four railroad company, has invented a new railroad tie, which is made of rolled steel plate in the form of an isosceles triangle, the broad base of which rests on the ground and the earth is tamped again t its sloping sides, the rail being clamped to the apex. The interior of this tie is filled with wood pulp, which deadens the sound caused by moving trains, and experiments show that the cars move over a road-bed on which these ties are laid noiselessly and smoothly.
